In addition there are many other metals and minerals in the United States which are needed for the national defense. With suitable exploration and development, and with suitable development of facilities for the treatment of these metals and minerals, a very substantial contribution to our national defense can be made. Among these metals and minerals are graphite, manganese, chrome, mica, and many other less well known but equally important metals and minerals.

LOAN GUARANTIES (SEC. 301)

During World War II, it was found that many firms could not qualify for defense contracts or subcontracts until they could demonstrate that they had the necessary financing and that, nevertheless, they could often not obtain the necessary financing from the banks until they had first received contracts or subcontracts. This vicious circle impeded production for national security purposes and prevented the proper utilization of the facilities of small firms.

The development in 1942 of the highly successful V-loan program of guarantied loans made it possible for many small firms to contribute their resources of initiative and skill and facilities to the war program.

The purpose of section 301 is to set up a similar program of guarantied loans now so as to prevent this vicious circle from arising later. This would help eliminate what might otherwise develop into a serious financial obstacle to efficient defense production. It would also help small business to contribute to defense production.

The loan guaranty provisions are designed to permit the greatest possible utilization of existing private and public agencies.

LOANS FOR CAPACITY EXPANSION, DEVELOPMENT, OR PRODUCTION (SEC. 302)

The loan provisions of the bill are designed primarily to aid investment in a few important specific cases where:

(a) Capacity is threatening to fall, due to inability of the firms concerned to find the capital (1) to develop new resources to offset depletion of existing exhaustible resources, or (2) to build facilities to offset the wearing-out of an already overage stock of facilities; or

In general, the types of facilities involved will be highly durable, requiring large investment relative to value of output. This makes the availability and cost of capital peculiarly important factors in motivating private expansion projects.

Most projects under section 302 would fall in the fields of mining, minerals processing, and transportation, where these conditions broadly apply. In addition the loans provided for in this section would be available to private business for the exploration and development of natural resources.

PROCUREMENT OF METALS, MINERALS, AND RAW MATERIALS (SEC. 303)

Some of the greatest shortages will occur in certain essential metals, minerals, and raw materials where the limitation on supply is not lack of capacity or capital, but insufficient incentives to producers to exploit available resources at home and abroad.

To increase the supply of these materials it is necessary to use means other than those provided in section 302.

This can be done in part through increased appropriations for the stockpiling program. However, more funds for stockpiling would not be sufficient to meet the needs. The reasons for this are as follows:

(a) Materials purchased for stockpiling must pass into the stockpile, whereas an increased supply will undoubtedly be needed for direct consumption for military and essential civilian purposes in addition to that needed for stockpiling.

(b) The stockpiling program is limited to specific strategic and critical materials, whereas procurement authority should be broad enough to extend to materials which are needed to support the military program generally, even though indirectly.

(c) Under decisions of the General Accounting Office to date, authority to make long-term contracts is restricted to 5 years—which in many cases is not enough to start the production needed now.

(d) The authority for advance payments in connection with procurement for the stockpile is incomplete.

(e) Stockpiling purchases must be made by the Federal Supply Service, whereas it may be desirable to have buying done by specialized agencies or corporations working on individual programs or buying abroad.

The purpose of the proposed section 303 is to overcome these limitations.

Under this we could probably develop a stepped-up program of purchases abroad—but without being necessarily limited to the purposes of meeting stockpile needs or to the use of the Bureau of Federal Supply. Materials could be obtained for direct use in defense or essential civilian production and through operations by any appropriate government agency including new agencies established for this purpose. In addition, materials could be obtained, even if not immediately needed for domestic military or civilian purposes, where necessary to preclude other nations from securing them. It is intended that the authority granted to make resales shall apply to scarce materials only.

So far as domestic sources are concerned, it would authorize the direct activation or expansion of operations at individual mines. It would stimulate marginal production and permit such production to reach the market without creating an upward pressure on prices.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS (SECS. 304 AND 305)

Effective administration may require centralization of all functions relating to a given capacity or production program in a single agency rather than having the program agency handicapped by the necessity of elaborate negotiations with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. For this reason, authorization is provided for any agency exercising functions under the title to borrow from the Treasury such sums as may be necessary, not in excess of $2,000,000,000.

The President is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Commerce the operation of the rubber, tin, and abacá programs.

PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Title IV. Price and Wage Stabilization

(Bill pp. 38–57)

In adding title IV to the defense production bill your committee has been particularly aware of the dangers of being lulled into a sense of false security by the apparently limited dimensions of the present military program. As Mr. Bernard Baruch testified:

> It may be argued that the menace of inflation is not so frightful today, since we are not at war. Actually, the danger is greater. Today our economy already is operating at full blast, with little or no slack. Our national debt is about $257,000,000,000, about six times what it was when Hitler invaded Poland. Living costs have climbed so high that serious hardship already is being inflicted on many, particularly those with low or fixed incomes.

When the problem of wage and price controls was raised with the President, he replied as follows:

> Dear Mr. Chairman: I am writing you in response to your request for my views on the expressed desire of various Members of the Senate to add to the defense production bill (S. 3936) some kind of authority for direct controls over wages, prices, and the distribution of goods to consumers.
> It is urgently necessary that the Congress act on the defense production bill without delay. If this measure is enacted promptly, we can do a great deal to ease the economic adjustments which our defense effort will require. At the same time, we can continue on an expedited but careful basis, our planning and preparation for other economic controls, if and when needed.
> Of course, there is no objection, in these circumstances, to enactment of additional stand-by control powers which the President could invoke when the need arose. Before my message of July 19, I gave careful thought to the desirability of asking at once for stand-by authority to control prices and wages, and to ration at the consumer level. I refrained from making this proposal to the Congress because it seemed more important to obtain quick action on the powers contained in the defense production bill. To have included a request for stand-by controls might, it seems to me, have dangerously delayed enactment of the immediate program, while the Congress considered these broader authorities. My recommendations of July 19, were designed to meet the problems immediately before us.
> The Congress, in its judgment, may now want to make price, wage and rationing controls available, on a stand-by basis, for use if and when needed. But if the Congress were to take this course, the following conditions appear essential.
> First.—These additional controls should be supplementary to, and not in lieu of, the basic powers already contained in the defense production bill. The production aids and limited controls for which I have asked, are essential now.
> Second.—We cannot afford to bog down or delay in enacting what is needed at once, and supplementary provisions should be added only if they do not prolong consideration or delay action in either House.
> Third.—Any provisions relating to prices and wages should not set up a rigid formula or freeze in advance of experience. If these powers are now made available in advance of widespread need, it is simple common sense that they must be written in a form which allows wide discretion and flexibility as to the method and place and timing of application.

Fourth.—For the same reason, any grant of price and wage authority should leave open the question of the method of administration. This should remain flexible, because it cannot be separated from the question of the extent to which price and wage controls actually might have to be applied.

If these reasonable conditions can be met, I should have no objection to the granting of authority beyond that requested in my message of July 19. But if, for any reason, these conditions cannot be met, I urge strongly that the Congress move at once to enact the defense-production bill without including these additional powers.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. Baruch, on the other hand, would go much further than the President with respect to authority for economic controls:

Some contend price increases can be prevented by public appeals and threats to invoke price-control legislation. That hope has already been dashed. Its fallacy lay in the fact that such threats could be effective only if price-control legislation were already on the statute books on a stand-by basis, ready to be put into instant operation.

Under such a stand-by law, with its due notice, the President would have had the legal authority to roll back the price increases of recent weeks to levels prevailing before the emergency began. The knowledge that the Government had this power might have prevented these price rises.

That was one of the many reasons for my insistence over the years on the necessity for putting into law a full stand-by mobilization program—to be able to prevent the runaway price increases which a war emergency always brings. Now, we have no alternative but compulsory controls—or pay the piper of inflation.

To wait until prices have run out of hand before legislation is sought means that action will not be taken until too late, until after additional inflation has taken place.

This legislation before you proposes that we deliberately refuse to lock the stable door until the horse is stolen.

The rise in prices which has already occurred since the Korean outbreak will be used to justify wage increases this fall and winter. Those wage increases may not do labor any good since higher wages will lead to still higher prices. Once the inflationary race has begun, it becomes ever more difficult to check. There will always be new groups to cry, "Wait with your controls until we have caught up."

The right time to stop inflation is always—now. It may be said that, while it is true economically that priorities must be accompanied by price controls, it is too soon politically. The people are not ready for it, so this argument runs, implying that we must wait for further disaster.

Those who believe this misread the temper and intelligence of the American people. * * *

The committee has adopted a position intermediate between the President and Mr. Baruch. We cannot altogether accept Mr. Baruch's view that a comprehensive system of controls is immediately necessary at this time and that the time is already past when stand-by controls would have a restraining effect on prices and wages. On the contrary, we feel strongly that a system of controls must be available both as a restraint and as a ready weapon for combating inflation if prices continue to rise.

The history of this Nation in times when we have had to take up arms to defend ourselves against the acts of agressors has shown that unless we have the power to control the actions of the market on the prices of goods, services and labor, we invite serious inflation. This inflicts immediate hardships, undermines morale, and impedes the war effort, and also invites economic collapse later. When we divert a substantial portion of our output to national defense, and at the same time pour additional billions into the income stream, we must be ready and able to put a checkrein on market actions. Without such a checkrein, buyers bidding competitively for a diminishing supply of goods and services generate a spiraling inflation for which there may be no end but economic collapse. The fact that we have escaped the worst consequences of inflation after two world wars should not blind us to its dangers; other nations—France, Germany, Japan—provide us with object lessons.

The start of a war, regardless of the degree of economic mobilization of resources, is typified by a sudden spurt of speculative market prices. Part of the spurt arises from the threat that imports will be cut off, part of it from the belief by businessmen and speculators alike that prices are more likely to go higher than lower in the immediate future. This leads to heavy buying with consequent increases in market prices. This happened in 1939 when prices on the organized markets jumped 25 percent in the month of September after war broke out in Europe. It happened again in 1941 when the war in Europe became more active and the United States became more involved. A similar spurt of speculative market prices has recently occurred. Between June 25 and August 8, 1950—a period of something over 1 month—prices on organized commodity markets in the United States have jumped more than 16 percent.

The market situation today is not strictly analogous to that of 1939 nor to that of 1941. There have been sharp increases in prices on the commodity markets. These increases have been most spectacular in the imported commodities. Rubber, where the market has been affected not only by the Korean situation, but also by the conditions in Malaya, jumped from 28 cents a pound to double or more. Tin, from the same area, has gone from 76 cents a pound to fractionally less than $1. Wool, mainly from Australia, has jumped 22 percent. Burlap from India is 28 percent higher. Even imported commodities which do not come from the Far East, have risen sharply—cocoa has advanced 27 percent and coffee 13 percent since June 23. On the other hand, some of the domestic products, such as grains and the basic metals, are only slightly higher; a few, like barley and flaxseed, are even cheaper than they were before Korea.

The increases today, however, are not confined to the basic commodity markets as they were in 1939. They are spreading into the remainder of the economy. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics testified that the prices at which manufacturers buy and sell their products increased more than 3 percent between June 20 and August 1; the prices of farm products and foods have increased 8 percent at wholesale and 3 percent at retail during this time. Except for foodstuffs, these price increases have not yet been generally reflected at the retail counters of the Nation. Despite runs by consumers on a number of commodities, most distributors and retailers have not raised the prices of the goods they have in stock. They have increased their selling prices only as higher cost replacement merchandise reached their shelves. However it appears inevitable that higher costs will be reflected at retail in time.

It is important not to be misled in the present situation by the experience in 1939. Then the underlying forces could not support the higher prices of the commodity markets—we had not mobilized our resources for war, and there was no diversion of production to war or defense. The speculative commodity market increases of 1939 never passed into other parts of the economy to manufacturer, distributor, and retailers.

In 1941, the picture was greatly different. As we produced more and more for defense, it became necessary to divert output from civilian to military uses. The demand for goods began to exceed the supply, and the net result was that the increases spread rapidly through the entire economy. By the end of June 1941, prices on the organized markets had risen more than 20 percent above their January levels; industrial and agricultural prices at wholesale had generally risen about 10 percent; and retail prices to consumers had risen about 4 percent. The necessity of imposing some check on this advance, was recognized at the time, and prices of some basic commodities were already under control at the time of Pearl Harbor. It was early in 1942 that the General Maximum Price Regulation was established. The committee wishes to lay emphasis on the fact that the 1941 increase in prices came after 2 years of European war and only after the basic inflationary forces of increased demand and decreased supply actually impinged upon the markets.

The market and price situation in August 1950 is in some respects similar to that of 1941. A sharp increase in the prices in the speculative markets has already been passed on to manufacturers, and will in turn be passed on to distributors, retailers, and consumers. In drafting title IV, your committee, however, has borne in mind some important difference between 1941 and 1950. In 1950 there is no actual shortage of most goods. So far, there has been little diversion of production from civilian to military uses. The increases have been the semiautomatic reactions of people to their memories of what happened in World War II. Many, from the largest corporations to the individual consumers, recall the shortages of World War II, and many are trying to anticipate and circumvent those shortages. In the process, they are creating momentary shortages, and consequent price rises. There has been scare buying and filling of pipelines all the way from consumer to producer. This kind of buying has its own limits on the amount that individuals can purchase in advance of actual use, and on what the pipelines can hold. However, with the economy operating at high levels and military expenditures rising, the danger is that these price rises will not be self-limiting and may generate a price-wage spiral.

It is the committee's opinion that a situation like that of today does not point to the immediate necessity of over-all controls of the economy. We feel that it requires a flexible system which can be brought into play for handling particular situations and individual commodities. Total controls are necessary only when a substantial share of the national effort is devoted to defense. The current appropriation requests for military and foreign aid spending totals approximately $30 billion. The goods and services this country is producing today amount to almost $270 billions. The military and foreign program as planned at present, will absorb between 10 and 15 percent of the national product. This is about the same as in 1941; by contrast, between 1942 and 1945, between 35 and 40 percent of our output was going for war.

The situation today is one in which the speculative elements are not confined to the commodity markets and the raw or basic materials traded thereon. Right now, the person who buys extra tires or the business which steps up its orders for materials a year in advance is speculating—gambling either that prices will rise or that the goods will not be obtainable in the future. The committee does not want to place the economy in a strait-jacket because of the action of these speculators. We must, however, be ready, willing, and able to control their actions if they do not control themselves. Your committee feels strongly that the existence of authority to stop these excesses will in itself do much to stop them.

Your committee has been especially mindful of the experience in World War II, and of the need that emerged in World War II to control more and more of the economy as the supplies of consumer goods contracted and incomes soared. It is the judgment of the committee that as long as the military expenditures are contained within the dimensions already specified by the President, vigorous programs of taxation and the control of credit will do much to restrain inflationary influences which might otherwise get out of hand. Your committee believes that under these conditions it may suffice to be able to apply limited, selective controls to prices and wages; accordingly this bill contains the authority for such controls.

At the same time, your committee recognizes that it is impossible to predict with finality what the future may bring, or what degree of military and economic mobilization may be required a few months or a year hence. Broad, general controls cannot be readied in a few weeks; preparatory planning should be begun immediately. The authority for this planning exists in this title of the bill.

WAGE STABILIZATION

It is clear from the experiences of World War I, World War II, and the year following World War II, that price stability cannot be maintained without some stabilization of wages, salaries, and other forms of compensation. On the one hand, increases in wages or salaries are directly or indirectly passed on in the form of cost and price increases or they create pressure upon established price ceilings and upon the prices of commodities purchased by the Government, under contract or open-market operations. On the other hand, increased purchasing power which results from higher wages and salaries creates a rising pressure of demand which tends to bid up prices where they are not controlled and to create gray or black markets where controls exist. In a period in which the volume of goods and services offered for sale throughout the economy is restricted by the demands of the military, purchasing power must be restricted if inflation is to be avoided. This is true at times even in individual cases in which the wage or salary increases may be absorbed by the employer and create no direct cost pressure upon established price ceilings. Wage stabilization is one of the devices which contributes to the restriction of purchasing power.

Wage stabilization may be required, in addition, as a necessary means of the stabilization of manpower movement. The recruiting of necessary manpower for the defense effort may be significantly impeded if wages in less essential industry are repeatedly raised in an effort to keep or attract scarce manpower skills. Competition for workers, among defense plants, on the basis of special wage inducements can in itself be an important cause of high turnover, labor "pirating," and lowered production. Stabilization of wages will minimize these types of competition, and will contribute to orderly recruitment of workers through established channels of the State and Federal employment services.

In unusual cases, of course, it may be necessary to permit increases in wages as exceptions to wage stabilization in a deliberate effort to attract workers to a vital defense establishment. This was necessary on several occasions in World War II. Such action is possible within the terms of the special authority given to the President to permit wage adjustments "necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act."

The degree of wage control required must in a general way parallel the degree of price control imposed upon the economy. At the very minimum, there must be sufficient wage control to protect established price control, and to deal equitably with those establishments whose operations are subject to price control. Selective price controls call for selective wage controls. Broad price control, particularly when sufficiently widespread to require application at the retail level, calls for broad wage controls. Wage and price control must go together in the interests of equity to both employer and employee. To the employee, price control is a necessary prerequisite for the imposition of wage control; it is a guaranty that prices will in fact be stabilized when his wage is stabilized. To the employer, wage control is a prerequisite for the imposition of price control; it is a guaranty that his wage-costs will not be unreasonably increased at a time when he cannot increase his prices.

Tying price and wage controls thus together, section 402 (b) of the bill authorizes the President to impose selective wage control following the imposition of selective price control. This section also requires that the President shall impose wage controls where wage increases would require increases in established price ceilings or would impose undue burden on sellers operating under established price ceilings.

Similarly, section 402 (c) authorizes the President to impose broader wage control in the event that broader price control is imposed. This section of the bill makes it mandatory, as in the case of selective price control under section 402 (b), to impose wage controls at least to the extent required to avoid forcing increases in price ceilings or imposing undue burdens on sellers operating under established price ceilings. Finally, the bill requires the President to impose controls of wages, salaries, and other compensation throughout the economy whenever price ceilings cover goods and services comprising a substantial part of retail sales and materially affecting the cost of living.

The authority to control wages is expressed throughout the bill in terms of authority to "stabilize" wages. There is no intention to apply an absolute wage freeze any more than to apply an absolute price freeze. Where rigid stabilization would create gross inequity or defeat the purposes of the act, sufficient flexibility is provided to permit necessary adjustment in wages, salaries and other compensation. This is the essence of the difference between a wage "freeze" and wage stabilization.

In providing flexibility, your committee was conscious of the need to make this flexibility broad enough to permit the granting of those types of wages and salary adjustment which are the incentives and rewards for increased productive effort by individual workers and thereby lessen inflationary pressures in accordance with the purposes of this act. Among such adjustments are individual wage adjustments which accompany the assumption of increased responsibility or productive performance, such as promotions, merit increases, increases in incentive payments, and the like. Your committee also recognized that regulations issued pursuant to the act would deal primarily with wage rates and rates of payment, rather than the total amounts of compensation paid to individuals. Thus, for example, it is intended that hourly rates by stabilized, but that the regulations permit fluctuations in weekly wages as hours of work change. Similarly, the bill provides sufficient flexibility to permit the exemption from wage stabilization of employers with only a handful of employees, where the difficulties of administration would be great and the effect upon the over-all program small.

The committee also had in mind, however, that there be no circumvention of the wage stabilization program by new forms of payment which might be construed to be outside the scope of "wages." Accordingly, the committee has throughout this title referred to "wages, salaries, and other compensation," rather than to "wages" alone, and has clearly set forth, in the definition contained in section 702 (e), its intention that the scope of wage stabilization shall extend to all forms of payment, including pension, insurance, and all other forms of "fringe" payment which have become increasingly common since World War II.

The achievement of successful stabilization of prices—the objective of the combined price-wage stabilization program—is of paramount importance, above all, to the wage and salary earners in their capacity as consumers. If prices rise, they are among the first to suffer. Historically, when prices have risen, wages and salaries have lagged behind and real wages have tended to fall. This would be the case again were we to have another race between wages and prices.

Title IV. Section 401

This section sets forth the intent of the Congress governing title IV and the purposes to be achieved thereby. The intent may be summarized in the phrase, "Economic Stabilization." Your committee has been most specific in setting forth the intent of Congress to govern the use of the great powers conferred by this title and to safeguard against administrative misuse. Your committee is aware that the stabilization of a wartime economy involves intrusions and interferences in the affairs of business, agriculture, labor, and individual consumers far beyond any which would be tolerated except in a situation which threatened the national security of the United States and its people. It is precisely for this reason that your committee in authorizing these powers, has as far as possible, circumscribed the conditions under which they may be invoked. Your committee gave serious consideration to providing automatic criteria which would govern the application of the several sections of this title, and concluded that the President must be given wide latitude and discretion. Your committee believes, however, that the statement of intent is both broad enough to cover the contingent emergencies that may arise and specific enough to provide substantive standards for the administration of the powers (bill pp. 38 and 39).

Subsection 402 (a)

This subsection provides that the President may encourage and use voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor, and consumers to contribute to economic stabilization. While no specific measures can be prescribed for this purpose in the bill, in fact much can be done on an entirely voluntary basis to restrain the inflationary forces. Your committee has noted with some concern the disturbing effects on the economy of scare buying, speculation, and hoarding by individual consumers and businesses in the weeks since June. We concur in the admonition of the President to these individuals and organizations that such action will only hasten the time when controls must be applied. It would be particularly unfortunate if, even in the face of plentiful supplies, these short-sighted tactics were to make it necessary to impose controls which might otherwise be deferred or avoided altogether (bill pp. 39 and 40).

Subsection 402 (b)

Paragraph (1) of this subsection provides what might be described as the first stage in the imposition of controls on the economy. It gives to the President authority to establish price ceilings selectively on any material which is of importance to the national defense or which significantly affects the cost of living, where an excessive and inflationary rise in price has occurred or threatens to occur; but this authority does not extend to the imposition of controls on prices at retail for household or personal use. It is intended that the President shall carefully weigh, along with many other factors, the levels of the consumer price index, the wholesale price index, and the daily index of spot market prices, as prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in determining when it is necessary to invoke any price controls under this subsection or subsection 402 (c). Paragraph (2) of the subsection provides for a parallel and closely corresponding application of controls over wages in the industry producing or handling those materials or property whose prices are controlled.

This paragraph expressly provides that the President may stabilize wages in any such industry, and that he must stabilize wages wherever an increase in wages either would require an increase in the ceiling price or, in the absence of such an increase, would impose an undue burden on the seller operating under the price ceiling.

With reference to the use of the words "undue burden," 402 (b), a question was raised whether the language would be broad enough to authorize the agency administering this act to hold that a wage increase on a price-fixed product which consumed or practically consumed all of the net profit of the seller would not be an undue burden on him, but the intent of your committee is to the contrary. It is your committee's intent in the use of these two words that any wage increase on a price-fixed product which did not leave to the seller a fair and reasonable profit would be an undue burden on him.

Your committee believes that the discretionary authority conferred upon the President by this subsection would suffice during a period when inflationary pressures were not gathering momentum very fast and while the impact of expenditures for military purposes and foreign assistance was felt on the prices only of certain commodities. If the rate of spending is not substantially increased beyond the approximate $30 billion now contemplated: and if these expenditures do not result in substantial curtailment of supplies of civilian goods; and if the programs of increased taxation and control of credit succeed in preventing inflationary increases in purchasing power, it may be that it will be unnecessary to go beyond these selective controls for a long time, if at all. If, on the other hand, the rate of expenditures has to be rapidly increased; if civilian supplies have to be curtailed sharply; and if inflationary pressures gather speed, this first stage may prove to be only a holding action while more extensive controls are readied.

The committee does not overlook the difficulties of administering controls on this selective basis. The selection of the commodities whose prices need to be controlled is dictated by the public interest and the needs of the military program, and not by normal peacetime standards of equity. What is "excessive and inflationary" in a defense situation might be considered reasonable and permissible in peacetime. The exercise of this authority selectively may, therefore, result in restraining price or wage increases which on their merits might seem reasonable under normal peacetime conditions. It is possible, for example, that the authority might be invoked to restrain both price and wage increases in a basic industry simply because of the widespread effects the increases would have on prices in other industries and on the wage structure generally. These potential effects might well make such increases "excessive and inflationary." The emergence of a large number of such situations might create great tensions in the economy which might lead to the need for general controls in the interest of equity.

We call attention particularly to the relationship between price and wage controls provided in this subsection. The President's discretion in applying price controls is paralleled by his discretion in applying wage controls. However, we wished to make sure that the imposition of wage controls became mandatory whenever a wage increase would exert irresistible pressure against a ceiling price or, as an alternative, would place an unfair squeeze upon the producer. Under such circumstances, the President is required by the act to prohibit wage increases except to the extent deemed necessary to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of the act. It is to be noted that these exceptions, while they may be the occasion for increases, do not nullify the requirement for wage control; in other words, regulations must be issued to stabilize wages even though such regulations need not, in the exceptional cases noted above, prohibit increases altogether. The committee expects that whenever the President finds it necessary to adjust wages, either to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of the act, he will give consideration to appropriate adjustments in the price ceiling also.

While the general parallelism of price and wage controls has been preserved, it is not the intention of the committee that price and wage controls should be thought of as coextensive in all cases. There will be occasions when one needs to be applied without the other. For example, it is not the committee's intention that the exemptions from price control as provided in subsection 402 (f) should imply in all cases a corresponding exemption from wage control; nor is it the intention that every case of a controlled price will have its counterpart in controlled wages. The general parallelism is provided to assist in carrying out the purposes of the act, which is the controlling criterion.

The word "margin" as used in (1) of this section is not intended to include the term as used in stock-market or commodity-exchange transactions (bill pp. 40 and 41).

Subsection 402 (c)

This subsection confers the complete and final authority on the President to control prices, including retail prices, and wages throughout any or all parts of the economy. Paragraph (1) permits the establishment of price ceilings without limitation (except for those exemptions specified in subsection 402 (f)). Paragraph (2) confers the authority for parallel control of wages, on the same basis as in section 402 (b).

It is specifically provided in subsection (c) that price and wage control can be applied either selectively or generally, and, if generally, as broadly as necessary. In the event, however, that general price controls become necessary, your committee has specified a standard which requires that wage controls be applied generally, also. This standard provides that general wage controls must be invoked whenever price ceilings have been established on materials, services, and property comprising a substantial part of sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living. The committee believes that when this point is reached in the control of prices, it is both equitable and necessary that general wage controls be applied: necessary because without wage stabilization, increased purchasing power would exert irresistible pressure against price controls; and equitable because once a substantial part of the cost of living is stabilized, the hardships of wage stabilization on wage earners are minimized.

This question of the point at which general wage and price controls should be invoked was most carefully considered by your committee. On the one hand, your committee recognized that it would be unwise to grant price and wage control authority unlimited by legislative standards and criteria. On the other hand, the committee recognized the dangers of placing too many restrictions on the exercise of such authority, considering the difficulty of anticipating the many situations which can arise. Your committee considered many suggestions by which the imposition of such controls might be determined by more or less automatic or specific criteria. In each instance, however, a majority of the committee felt that more general criteria and a wider delegation of authority were to be preferred. This was particularly the case in view of the still uncertain course of the total defense expenditure within the next year, and the necessity of having authority to act quickly should the international situation suddenly worsen (bill pp. 41 and 42).

This subsection provides the basic standards to guide the President whenever he takes action to stabilize any prices and wages. In controlling prices and wages, the President must ascertain and give due consideration to the comparable levels of such prices and wages which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, inclusive (or the nearest date if this period is not applicable because of some abnormal market factors). The President must also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this act.

In determining and adjusting ceiling prices, consideration must be given to factors which the President may determine to be of general applicability. These include such factors as speculative fluctuations; general increases in the costs of production, distribution, and transportation; and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material, property, and service after June 24, 1950. Similarly, in stabilizing wages, the President must give due consideration to relevant factors of general applicability.

Any regulation or order issued under this title is required to be generally fair and equitable and must be accompanied by a statement of the considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

The basic standards set forth in this subsection, in the committee's opinion, provide the President with the flexibility that he requires to meet the changing economic situation. He may establish as the level of prices and wages those prevailing in the period May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive—a period when the price-wage relationships were not under the influence of events in Korea and which may be said to reflect more nearly the interactions of market conditions in a normal peacetime economy. The President, however, in determining at what levels any price or wage shall be stabilized must consider the general factors which are relevant, and, in every case where he issues a regulation or order, it must be generally fair or equitable. The basis for the regulation or order must be explained in the statement of considerations which is to accompany it.

The requirement that regulations and orders must be generally fair and equitable is a recognition of the fact that the regulations or orders which apply to large groups of people cannot take account of every individual circumstance. To require that they do so would make ineffective the purpose of the regulation or order. However, to the extent that the purposes of this act would not be interfered with, the basic standards permit of enough flexibility to provide for such adjustments where individual hardships are created under such orders. Moreover, the economic relationships in existence prior to the events in Korea were highly favorable so that reference to a period before June 25 is not likely to work general hardship (bill pp. 42 and 43).

This subsection deals with the applicability of regulations or orders, and limits the authority of the President in stabilizing prices and wages.

It provides that any regulations or orders shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore and hereafter incurred. The purpose of this provision is to permit the regulations to supersede private contracts when such contracts specify prices and wages inconsistent with those permitted, or when they contain terms forbidden by a regulation or order.

In the case of wages, no wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24 to June 24, 1950, inclusive, and any action taken on wages or salaries must not be inconsistent with the laws of the United States or any subdivision thereof. Since wages and salaries are usually changed at relatively infrequent intervals, the levels of wages and salaries prevailing in the base period represent contracts entered into on the average well before the base period. In effect, therefore, wages and salaries during the base period reflect the market conditions of an earlier period, while the level of prices in the base period generally reflects the market conditions in that period. Under these circumstances, it is highly desirable to provide this limit on any possible rollback of wages and salaries while permitting a more flexible situation with respect to prices (bill pp. 43–45).

AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

(Bill pp. 44 and 45)

Section 402 (e) (3) limits the authority of the President with respect to ceilings on any agricultural commodity by providing that no ceiling may be established or maintained below (1) the parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, or (2) the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. These prices are subject to adjustment for grade, location, and seasonal differentials. This limitation on the authority of the President is in keeping with the policy of Congress that the parity price is a fair price for agricultural commodities. The date June 15, 1950, has been selected because it was the last date before the end of the base period (May 24, 1950–June 24, 1950), specified in section 402 (d), for which data on prices received by farmers for agricultural commodities have been collected by the Secretary of Agriculture. The agricultural prices received by producers on June 15, 1950, as published by the Department of Agriculture, of course, do not include a number of commodities which, because of their seasonal nature, were not marketed on that date. The effective minimum ceiling prices for those commodities under this section, therefore, will be the parity price. Wool, soybeans, beef cattle, lamb, and veal calves were the major agricultural commodities for which prices received by farmers on June 15, 1950, exceeded the parity price.

Consistent with the requirements with respect to minimum ceilings on agricultural commodities, it is also provided that no ceiling shall be established or maintained for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher of the two specified prices. It is further provided that nothing in the act shall be construed as affecting the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, under which the Secretary is authorized to issue orders prescribing minimum prices which dealers pay farmers for milk. As used in this act, the term "agricultural commodity" is intended to mean any commodity for which the Secretary of Agriculture has determined a parity price.

The provision for the adjustment of fresh fruit and vegetable ceilings under certain conditions is similar to that contained in the 1944 amendment to the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942. This provision was adopted at that time because of the difficulties experienced in establishing fair and equitable ceilings for fresh fruits and vegetables in view of the unusual hazards which are involved in their production and marketing.

Subsection 402 (f)

This subsection exempts from price and wage control under this title certain categories of items. These are: (1) Prices or rentals for real property; (2) rates or fees for professional services; (3) prices or rentals for books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap, and rates charged by newspapers, magazines, radio or television stations, motion pictures, or other advertising facilities; (4) insurance rates; and (5) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility.

Some of these items are covered by regulation in other ways. Thus, rents on residential property are subject to control under existing law. Rates of common carriers and other public utilities are regulated under existing State and Federal laws.

The other items exempted are mainly those items which were not controlled during the last war. It did not seem desirable to permit control of them in the present situation.

With respect to the exemptions for newspapers, radio broadcasting and other media of public information, the committee had acted to protect freedom of expression from any possibility of interference, however indirect. It is expected however, that in establishing their prices and rates, these exempted businesses will set public examples of restraint and moderation, especially if the time might come when the wages of their employees may be controlled even though their prices are not (bill pp. 45 and 46).

Subsection 402 (g)

This subsection permits the President by regulation or order to provide exemptions for any materials, services, property, or transactions, or types of employment with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary to control those prices or wages in order to effectuate the purposes of this act. However, no exemption is permitted for those cases where regulations are required by section 402 (b) or 402 (c).

This provision draws on the experience of World War II when some items were exempt from price control to further Government procurement. It also gives the President flexibility in applying or modifying any regulation or order he has issued. However, the exemption does not apply to any regulation or order required to stabilize wages, salaries, or other compensation to prevent price increases in established ceilings or to prevent the imposition of an undue burden on a seller subject to a price ceiling established under section 402 (b) and 402 (c). This preserves equity between employers and employees and minimizes the pressures of wage costs on price ceilings. The intent of this subsection is to permit minor adjustments of inequalities in order to effectuate the purposes of the bill and is not intended to permit the elimination of price or wage controls on an arbitrary basis in any area of controls (bill p. 46).

Your committee carefully considered the question of the proper administrative organization for the administration and enforcement of price and wage control authority conferred by various sections of this title. The committee concluded that in the early stages of control, such as those provided in subsection 402 (b) for limited and selective controls, the choice of the agency should be left entirely to the discretion of the President. The committee felt strongly, however, that the experience of World War II indicated that once it was necessary to have general price and wage controls, and rationing of goods to consumers for personal and household use, a new independent agency should be set up to assure proper coordination of the various aspects of this vast program. However, it is not the intention to require rationing controls at the consumer level solely because price and wage controls have become necessary generally, or to prevent the earlier imposition of rationing if needed.

The committee was fearful that the delegation of Presidential authority to various executive agencies might lead to the dispersion of the price authority, for example, to two or more agencies with different standards of treatment for different classes of producers; or that the authority to control wages might be too far removed from the authority to control prices. In such cases the coordination by the President could be only nominal because of the great burdens borne by the President. The committee therefore provided that a single, new, independent agency should be responsible for the enforcement of all aspects of the program. Although it is clearly intended that such an agency should use the facilities for service, information, and inspection which can be more economically provided by existing agencies, it is provided that the enforcement authority of the new agency may not be delegated. Of course the President may establish such an agency before it has become necessary to impose price and wage controls over a substantial portion of the national economy, if in his discretion such action is advisable (bill pp. 46 and 47).

Section 404

This requires the President, so far as is practicable, to advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of representative persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued herewith. This was required during the last war. It is important to insure that any regulations or orders that are issued benefit from the advice and experience of those affected by them. In this way, regulations or orders will be based on the best information and advice available. This section supplements other provisions of the bill, particularly sections 701 and 709 on this point (bill p. 47).

Section 405

Subsection (a).—This subsection makes it unlawful, regardless of any obligation, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive any material, service, or property, or otherwise to do anything which is in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing (bill pp. 47 and 48).

Subsection 405 (b)

This subsection adopts the language of the Stabilization Act of October 2, 1942, respecting the penalties to be applied for violations of the wage and salary stabilization program. The committee finds that the disallowance of illegal wage payments as a cost of doing business, for purposes of computing taxes, Government contract payments, and for purposes of establishing price ceilings, was an effective deterrent. The committee has specifically included the provision which prohibits the receipt by an employee of any wage, salary, or other compensation in violation of regulations or orders issued under the authority of this title. This section is also believed to be a deterrent to the bringing of undue pressure upon employers to give wage or salary adjustments which would violate established wage-stabilization regulations. Your committee notes, however, that the effective protection of the economy against the inflationary effects of substantial wage increases which might be sought through pressure and threat of strike action lies in the wage-stabilization program itself, in the voluntary restraint which employees and their representatives can be expected to exercise in a period of national emergency, and in the effective use of the authority conferred upon the President under title V and under other statutes affecting labor-management relations (bill, pp. 47 and 48).

This title is intended to safeguard any person in his right not to sell any material, service, or property or to perform any personal service against his will (bill, p. 48).

Section 407 makes provisions for the filing of protests against regulations and orders by persons affected by those orders. Section 407 provides that at any time within 6 months after the issuance of an order, a person subject to it may file a protest which the President must grant or deny within 30 days. (In the case new grounds for the protest arise after the issuance of an order, the protest may be filed within 6 months after the new grounds arise.) Where the protestant requests, he may have a hearing before a board of review, with an opportunity for presenting evidence and giving an oral argument. A similar provision was contained in the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 (bill, pp. 48–59).

Section 408 provides for appeals to the Emergency Court of Appeals, which was established under the Emergency Price Control Act and which is still in existence for the purpose of handling certain rent control cases.

The Emergency Court of Appeals consists of three or more judges of the United States court of appeals selected by the chief justice. They sit in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in the country as occasion may require. Appeals may be made to this court, and from it to the Supreme Court when the President has denied a protest under section 408. In general, the provisions for the Emergency Court of Appeals is comparable to that under the Emergency Price Control Act, but your committee has not followed that act with respect to the determination of the validity of regulations under this title. On the contrary, instead of providing, as that act provided, that the Emergency Court of Appeals should have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of price-control regulations, your committee has given exclusive jurisdiction to the Emergency Court of Appeals with respect to orders enjoining and staying these orders and regulations, but has left to courts of general or other competent jurisdiction the authority to declare invalid these regulations or orders. This will permit a person being tried in a local court on a charge of violation of these regulations to contest in that court the validity of the regulations issued under this title. While your committee recognizes the advantages of a specialized skilled court for the purpose of making these determinations, your committee considers it even more important to give to the public the protection of a full trial on the merits in his own local court.

Section 408 provides that the President may enjoin prospective violations of regulations under this title and also provides for a fine of $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. In addition, section 409 provides that a person who buys an article, for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business, over the ceiling price may bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge and may recover a minimum of $25 and a maximum of three times the amount of the overcharge (but not to exceed the amount of the overcharge plus $10,000). The section also provides that the recovery shall be limited to the amount of the overcharge if the violation was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. In addition, if the buyer does not bring an action himself within 30 days, the President may institute such an action for triple damages (bill pp. 50–57).

Title V. Settlement of Labor Disputes

(Bill pp. 57 and 58)

This title is intended to strengthen the national defense effort by giving the President the necessary authority to prevent interruption of production by labor disputes which affect the national defense. In an emergency period we can ill afford to permit labor disputes to follow their normal course to eventual settlement. The institution of price and wage stabilization provided for under title IV of this bill would add to the strain upon normal collective bargaining. We therefore need a peaceful means of settling labor disputes which may threaten national defense or economic stabilization. We must state our intention of meeting this need, so that labor and management alike will be assured that the economic strains which come with the stabilization effort will be dealt with in peace and fairness to all.

Your committee wishes to emphasize that this title does not contemplate any departure from our national labor policy of encouraging the practice of collective bargaining. On the contrary, this policy is expressly reaffirmed and it is intended that most disputes will be settled by the efforts of the parties either through collective bargaining or through the use of mediation and conciliation. Only when such methods prove ineffective will it be necessary to resort to the procedures which the President is authorized to establish under this title.

This title contemplates a board or commission to deal with disputes which affect the national defense, whether they arise by reason of wage and price stabilization, or otherwise. The usefulness of this method of handling disputes affecting national defense was proven by our recent experience under a comparable set-up during World War II.

Under section 502, the President, before establishing such a board, is to consult with labor and management. This might be accomplished by calling a national labor-management conference such as was held during World War II, when a no-strike, no-lock-out pledge was obtained from labor and mangaement.

Subsequent to such consultation the President is authorized to establish principles and procedures, and to take appropriate action including the designation of a board or commission, for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

It is the intent of this title that such an agency should be fair to all parties, should be bound by the stabilization policy, and should make decisions which substantially follow normal collective-bargaining practice. This title does not alter existing labor standards and labor-relations statutes; on the contrary, no action can be taken under this title which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or other applicable statutes, such as the Public Contracts Act, the Railway Labor Act, or the Davis-Bacon Act. It is clear, however, that existing procedures are not adequate to deal with labor disputes in a period of wage and price stabilization. For example, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service is not authorized to enter a labor dispute unless requested to do so by one of the parties to the dispute or unless the parties accept its proffer of services. Likewise, the National Labor Relations Board and its general counsel have no machinery or statutory power to mediate or conciliate, or to pass on many of the questions which may arise out of wage stabilization.

The committee contemplates, however, that the President, in taking action in a labor dispute affecting national defense will have available to him the procedures provided by existing statutes, as well as those authorized by this title. For instance, if a dispute came within the terms of the national emergency provisions of the Labor-Management Relations Act, action might be taken under that act.

Your committee is confident that, with accumulated wisdom and experience gained during the last war and since that time in the peaceful settlement of industrial disputes and given the proper machinery, we can reduce to an absolute minimum the production and labor power dissipated as a result of industrial disputes.

Labor and management recognize their destiny rests in their ability to produce and work together for victory on the battlefield as well as for peace and plenty at home. Your committee and, we believe, the Nation are confident that their trust in them during what may be the most critical period in our Nation's history, will be more than justified.

Title VI of the bill would authorize controls over additional extensions of consumer and real-estate credit. These controls are designed to curb inflationary tendencies and conserve materials and facilities needed for national defense. The potential dangers of inflation, both to our general economy and to our national-defense needs, are well recognized. The present international situation has greatly increased the necessary demands of the Government for goods and services. One of the major factors in the high volume of private purchases has been the availability of mortgage and consumer credit on liberal terms. Unless prompt and effective action is taken, this situation will upset the Nation's economic balance and add to the difficulties in procuring the manpower and materials necessary for our national security. Particularly at a time when the resources of the Nation are fully employed, there is great danger, without the authority contained in title VI, of runaway prices which will impose an intolerable burden on consumers and add greatly to the costs of mobilization and rearmament.

Your committee is convinced that control over both consumer and real estate credit is the logical initial action to be taken. If the authorities granted in title VI are put promptly into effect, there is sound reason to believe that both the scope and severity of more direct and onerous controls will be lessened, and the administrative problems inherent in such controls will be simplified.

Regulation of consumer credit

Section 601 of the amended bill would provide for the regulation of consumer credit by reinstating the authority of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to exercise controls over such credit in accordance with Executive Order No. 8843, dated August 9, 1941. It was under such authority that the Board of Governors regulated consumer credit, through its regulation W, from September 1941 through October 1947, and again a more limited form from September 1948 to June 1949.

As introduced, the bill would have dealt with this subject by entirely new comprehensive legislation authorizing the President to regulate consumer credit. Your committee felt, however, that it would be preferable to vest the authority directly in the agency which had previously exercised such controls and to follow the precedent set by the act of August 16, 1948, which reinstated the authority of the Board of Governors to exercise controls over consumer credit under Executive Order No. 8843 for a temporary period ending June 30, 1949. It is further intended that these controls shall be exercised substantially as they were during World War II.

Consumer credit has been a major factor in expanding the demand for consumer goods. The volume of such credit had been increasing rapidly prior to the Korean crisis, with an increase of about $3,000,000,000 a year since the end of 1945. The increase in the past year was 3.5 billion dollars, and in May it was about 500 million dollars, the largest increase on record for that month. The most important segment of total consumer credit is installment credit, especially for the purchase of durable goods. During the past year, installment credit rose nearly $3,000,000,000, and accounted for 83 percent of the increase in total consumer credit. The role which installment credit has been playing in the growth of demand is illustrated not only by the amount of expansion, but also by the relaxation in the terms under which such credit is extended. Reports of declines in required down payments have become widespread and the average period of repayment has lengthened progressively.

With demand for consumer goods already at a very high level, the Korean crisis caused a new wave of consumer buying, which has been aided by the easy credit terms generally prevailing. There is a tendency for demand to outrun supply in some instances, and the rise in consumer prices, which began in March, has been further accelerated, with prices approaching record levels. As the requirements for military purposes increase, it may be expected that this situation will be further aggravated and that we may be faced with serious problems of gray markets and spiraling prices, unless prompt action is taken.

Under the authority to regulate consumer credit provided in section 601 of the amended bill, minimum down payments on purchases, maximum maturities, and other standards appropriate to limit credit extension could be prescribed. Such regulation is an essential part of a program to accomplish the purposes of this legislation. Not only would it assist in preserving our economic balance by reducing the demand for consumer goods and the inflationary pressure upon the prices of such goods, but it would also aid in making available the manpower and materials necessary for the national defense and the military effort.

Your committee in attempting to control the volume of consumer credit does not wish inadvertently to discourage thrift. Therefore it is not intended that loans to members of savings and loan associations secured by share or deposit accounts in such associations be subject to any consumer-credit regulation. When a member of a savings and loan association obtains a loan secured by his account, he does so in lieu of making a withdrawal from his account. Such loans do not create new credit. They are merely a device whereby a member may temporarily use a part of his savings without loss of current earnings. This device encourages a continuation of a thrift program. Under the old regulation W, members frequently withdrew accounts in their entirety in protest against regulation W restrictions, with the result that they had more money to spend than would have been the case had they been permitted to obtain share loans without submitting to the requirements of regulation W.

REAL ESTATE CREDIT CONTROL

Need for control

The unrestricted continuation of real estate lending at the current rate would be a major inflationary force during the current defense period.

Outstanding mortgage debt is now more than three times as great as all outstanding consumer credit and is currently increasing at a rate about twice the rate of increase in consumer credit.

[In billions of dollars]

	Nonfarm mortgage debt	Mortgage debt on 1-to-4-family houses	Total consumer credit
1941	$32.4	$19.4	$9.9
1949	[1] 57.0	[1] 37.4	18.8

Expansion of mortgage credit contributes not only to the demand for labor, materials, and equipment that go into housing and other construction, but, by increasing available purchasing power, also increases the demand for all other goods. The expansion of such credit has been a necessary factor in the provision of urgently needed homes and other essential construction. However, when our now expanded defense needs are added to the current unprecedented demand for new homes and other buildings, a severe strain is being placed on the resources of the building industry and related construction materials industries. With these industries already operating at capacity, new credit cannot increase the general availability of goods or facilities, but must result (as we have seen in the past few months, even before the Korean outbreak) in higher prices. Similarly, when industry operating at capacity diverts or prepares to divert a part of its production to defense uses, there will be inflationary tendencies unless other demands for its production are correspondingly decreased. Curtailment of credit is an effective means for decreasing such other demands and thereby makes easier the release of manpower and critical materials for our defense needs.

The total nonfarm real estate mortgage debt outstanding at the end of 1949 was $57,000,000,000, an increase of 75 percent from the 32.4 billion dollars at the end of 1941. As a matter of fact, virtually all of this increase has occurred since 1945. Over 60 percent of this debt was secured by one- to four-family homes, about 20 percent by multifamily structures, and less than 20 percent by commercial or industrial properties. Home mortgages made in the first half of 1950 amount to about 6½ billion dollars or at an annual rate of $13,000,000,000. The net increase in home mortgage debt outstanding during the first half of 1950 (after regular amortization and other repayments) was about $3,000,000,000, bringing the total outstanding on June 30 to about $40,000,000,000 or double the figure outstanding at the end of World War II.

In the first 6 months of 1950 (before the Korean outbreak) construction activity as a whole was 20 percent above 1949, and housing starts were 50 percent above 1949. Prices of building materials had climbed back almost to the postwar peak; during the single month of July, the index rose an additional 3 percent. From all indications prices of both building materials and new housing will continue to increase sharply unless adequate measures are taken promptly. The repercussions of price increases in the construction industry will be felt throughout the entire economy. We cannot maintain the present high level of construction and at the same time meet our new military commitments without running the risk of widespread and serious inflation.

Even more important than the need for avoiding inflation is the necessity for curtailing construction which takes materials and labor needed for military production. The construction industry is an important consumer of steel and other materials in short supply. It employs hundreds of thousands of skilled workers now in great demand. Curtailment of construction will result in the curtailment of demand for the great variety of commodities needed to furnish and equip new buildings, e. g. house furnishings, furniture, and equipment. "Construction as usual" would greatly impede the acceleration of our defense output, the immediate objective of our Nation.

Historically, high rates of investment in new construction have occurred during periods of liberal credit. Real-estate investment by its nature is usually accomplished by extensive use of long-term borrowed money. It is therefore an activity peculiarly sensitive to credit restrictions. Furthermore, control of credit as a device for controlling construction is more easily administered than direct limitations, priorities, and allocations. Credit control does not require elaborate administrative machinery and procedures onerous to both the Government and the public. While more direct controls may prove necessary if a drastic curtailment is required, as a practical matter they cannot be so quickly applied.

Additional legislative authority necessary

The Federal Government has already taken action, within the scope of its legislative authority, to curtail certain types of mortgage credit in the field of housing as a means of conserving resources for defense and reducing inflationary pressures. For example, at the request of the President to the Housing and Home Finance Administrator, the Federal Housing Administration has reduced maximum loan ratios for all of the major types of insured mortgages by 5 percent, and has frozen construction costs for mortgage valuation purposes to those in effect on July 1, 1950. It has also required a minimum down payment of 10 percent on modernization and repair loans insured under title I of the National Housing Act. These and other actions taken by FHA will place a brake on certain housing production and modernization and tend to reduce the inflationary effects of current home financing. Upon similar request by the President, the Veterans' Administration has, to the extent permitted by law, taken parallel steps with respect to its home loan guarantee functions, and has restricted its direct loan program. Similar actions have limited low rent public housing construction assisted by the Public Housing Administration and other housing assisted by the Federal Government.

Your committee believes that these initial steps to control housing credit, although desirable, will be of limited effectiveness without additional legislation. Present legislation is inadequate in the following respects:

(1) There is no existing authority to extend these controls to any loans other than housing loans assisted or made by the Federal Government, and

(2) Because of mandatory provisions in some authorizing laws, there is no present authority to control adequately certain types of loans assisted by the Federal Government.

Less than half of the outstanding home mortgage debt is insured or guaranteed by the Federal Government, as indicated in the following table. Any Federal action with respect to the remainder is limited to indirect supervisory activity by the Home Loan Bank Board or other Federal supervisory agencies. It is therefore obvious that a control covering less than half of the housing credit field will be seriously deficient. In the first place, in order to obtain any given total effect on construction, with control over only part of the credit facilities, the action necessary will have to be much more restrictive. Secondly, the more restrictive the action on insured and guaranteed mortgages, the greater the encouragement for both lenders and borrowers to seek unrestricted types of housing credit, including resort to risky second mortgages at high rates of interest, and particularly in the absence of any standardized appraisal system in the conventional lending field. Finally, if we are forced to rely entirely on credit restrictions on insured and guaranteed mortgages, the sharpest impact will be felt by the groups Congress has long intended should be the principal beneficiaries of those programs—veterans and other moderate-income families.

The present authority for credit controls is thus inadequate because much of its effect may now be dissipated through the availability of uncontrolled credit. It is therefore essential that legislation be granted to round out the existing authority in this field.

As already indicated, credit controls constitute the logical first course of action in controlling construction activity. Without resorting to the elaborate administrative machinery required for some other types of restrictions, credit controls can be applied at once and with desirable selectivity, for example according to the type of house or other structure, the defense needs in particular areas, and occupancy preferences. Thus, the most stringent credit controls could be applied with respect to construction that is unnecessary to defense activities and least essential to public needs. It is the intent of your committee that these controls should be used to preserve the relative preferences accorded to veterans under existing law, and with special attention to the needs of those least able to afford housing.

Real-estate credit control provided in title VI

Sections 602, 603, 604, and 605 of the bill contain the necessary provisions to round out the existing legislative authority of the Federal Government with respect to real-estate credit, and to correct the deficiencies in that authority explained under the previous heading of this report.

Section 602.—This section would confer the authority with respect to the control of conventional credit for real-estate construction—that is, loans for such construction not made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government.

As introduced, the bill would have given powers with respect to both consumer credit and real-estate credit to the President to be delegated by him to appropriate agencies of the executive branch. However, as already noted, your committee feels that consumer credit controls were successfully applied by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System during World War II and has, accordingly, provided for the reinstatement of the same powers in the Board. Because of the relationship between consumer credit and real-estate credit and the need for coordinating real-estate credit with general credit and monetary policy, your committee has also placed controls over this phase of the credit situation in the hands of the Board with the provision, however, that the Board may act through and utilize the services of the Federal Reserve banks and any other Federal or State agencies which may be appropriate. The committee recognizes the great difficulties involved in the administration of controls of this nature, but believes that the Federal Reserve Board is peculiarly adapted to cope with the types of problems that will arise.

It is the intention of your committee that the Federal Reserve Board, through appropriate delegations of authority and otherwise, exercise this power and utilize the services of other agencies to the maximum extent consistent with good administration, and that, particularly with respect to housing, it consult with and co-ordinate its policies, regulations, and orders with the Housing and Home Finance Agency, which has the major responsibilities of the Government in connection with housing and housing credit, as well as extensive experience through contacts and operations in the field. Also, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, through the National Housing Council, is already charged by law with the responsibility for "facilitating consistency between such housing functions and activities and the general economic and fiscal policies of the Government. * * *" The Housing Agency in the administration of its regular programs regularly assembles considerable current housing and credit data which will be useful in the formulation and administration of the controls contemplated by section 602.

Your committee has made another substantial change in the provisions of this title of the bill, as introduced, relating to the control of conventional credit. It has removed from such provisions all control over credit with respect to existing construction, so that control of conventional credit would be applicable only to future construction of structures or major additions or improvements to structures. As credit with respect to existing structures does not directly affect the use of materials needed for the national defense, it is the view of your committee that control of such credit is not necessary at this time.

Subsection (a) of section 602 contains the basic regulatory authority over conventional real-estate credit. To assist in carrying out the purposes of the bill, the Federal Reserve Board would be authorized to prescribe regulations from time to time which, in its judgment, are necessary in order to prevent or reduce the excessive or untimely use of, or fluctuations in, real estate construction credit covered by this section. The regulations could prescribe such matters as the kind or kinds of such real estate construction credit to be regulated, maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments, maximum maturities, and amounts of credit, and rules against any credit in specified circumstances. Rules also could be prescribed regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and regarding other similar or related matters. Persons or transactions could be appropriately classified, including classification of transactions as to type, form, area, or otherwise. The regulations, in addition, could include such administrative provisions as are reasonably necessary to effectuate the purposes or to prevent evasions of the authority so established.

The Board could change or suspend the regulations from time to time in order to take account of changing conditions. But, in either prescribing, changing, or suspending the regulations, the Board would be required to consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (a) purchasing power and (b) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

Subsection (b) would prohibit extension or maintenance of credit in a manner contrary to the regulations prescribed under this section. It would also provide that persons subject to such regulations shall make, keep, and preserve such records and related matters and make such reports, as may be necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of these controls. In addition, provision would be made for periodic or other examinations or inspections which the Board deems reasonably necessary or appropriate.

Under subsection (c), persons, transactions, or classes of persons or transactions subject to this section could be registered. This would not be an automatic requirement but one which could be included in the regulations prescribed by the Board. Your committee understands that such a requirement would be not only of material assistance in enforcement but also a valuable source of information as to such matters as the number of persons or the volume of transactions subject to regulation. The subsection also provides for the suspension of any such registration for violation of the section or regulations prescribed thereunder. This could be done only after notice and opportunity for hearing; and any person whose registration is suspended would be entitled to court review of the suspension order under the judicial review provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

Your committee is of the opinion that the registration authorized in subsection (c) would afford a desirable means for enforcing conventional credit controls. The use of a similar authority with respect to consumer credit during World War II was very successful and was not onerous to the registrants or to the Government. This subsection (c) would also specifically provide that the Board could act through and utilize the services of the Federal Reserve banks and any other agencies, Federal or State.

Subsection (d) would define certain basic terms used in this section but would permit the issuance of regulations by the Board to further define such terms (in a manner not inconsistent with the provisions of this section) and to define technical trade and accounting terms.

The definition of "real estate construction credit" would determine the type of credit included in the section. It would define the term to mean any credit extended after the effective date of the legislation wholly or partly upon the basis of the security of, or for the purpose of purchasing, carrying, or financing new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction, or which involves a right to acquire or use new construction. "New construction" would be defined as meaning any structure or major addition or improvement to a structure begun after noon of August 3, 1950.

In using the term "begun" in relation to construction your committee recognizes that the date when construction was begun involves drawing a line at a particular spot in the course of a relatively long process. The date the committee had in mind in using the term "begin" construction was the time when materials which are to be an integral part of the structure are incorporated on the site. Under this definition such matters as demolition, site preparation in constructing forms for concrete would not constitute the beginning of construction. On the other hand, construction would have been begun if concrete footings had been poured, or permanent bearing piles had been driven, or foundation walls had been built, whether laid dry or with mortar. Your committee recognizes that the Federal Reserve Board, to whom this authority is delegated, would have to issue regulations, more precisely define the meaning of the term in its regulations, and in addition the Federal Reserve Board would have authority to give consideration to unusual hardships arising from situations where the builder was substantially committed, even though he had not begun construction and might suffer irreparable hardship under an unduly harsh exercise of the real estate credit controls.

There would be specifically excluded from the definition of "real estate construction credit" any loan or loans made, insured or guaranteed by the Federal Government or any Federal agency.

The term "credit" would be defined broadly so as to include clearly any credit, or any arrangement which in effect constitutes credit. This definition is intended to be all-inclusive so as to guard against inequities or loopholes which may render it ineffective. This is not to be construed, however, to prevent the Federal Reserve Board from making appropriate exemptions with respect to proper classes of transactions such as the erection of a plant for national defense purposes.

Section 603 contains the usual penalties for willful violation of any of the provisions of this section or regulations or orders issued thereunder.

Section 604.—This section would provide that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, in exercising controls under sections 601 and 602 shall have the same authority with respect to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters as the Security and Exchange Commission has with respect to its functions under the provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended.

Section 605.—This section would round out the authority of the President to control future real-estate loans made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government, as distinguished from conventional real-estate loans covered by section 602. To assist in carrying out the objectives of the bill, the President would be authorized to reduce the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loans to value or cost, or maximum maturities of real-estate loans made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any of its agencies. In appropriate cases, the President could reduce or suspend any such loan, insurance, or guaranty program of the Government. Action authorized under this section could be taken only after consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and upon a determination, after considering its effect on the building industry, the national economy, and the need for increasing defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest. The provision requiring consultation was added by your committee. The President, in the exercise of the powers given to him by this section, would be required to take into consideration the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

This section would thus permit the President to extend existing controls on loans made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government to those additional loans of this type where the Government now has no discretionary authority to apply such controls. It would also strengthen his legal authority with respect to the control of all loans made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government. The section would thus permit the control of these loans to be handled in a consistent and equitable manner.

Your committee expects that in the administration of the authority granted in section 605 full use will be made of existing facilities and agencies of the Federal Government. The committee further intends that the housing or other agencies given duties under this section consult with the Federal Reserve Board.

Your committee cannot overemphasize the importance which it attaches to coordination and cooperation among the agencies of the Government with respect to credit controls under title VI, particularly those with respect to housing credit. This applies to the controls under sections 601 and 602, as well as those under section 605. The control of housing credit, insured, guaranteed, or conventional, must be integrated with the basic housing responsibilities of the Federal Government. While housing considerations must be subordinated to the necessities of national security, the Nation's housing standards should be maintained at as high a level as is consistent with defense needs. Orderly readjustment of the home-building industry to meet changing requirements is also essential. Under current conditions, it is of paramount importance that whatever restrictions are necessary are equitably applied without requiring undue sacrifice from those least able to pay for housing.

Your committee believes selective application of housing credit controls, coordinated with considerations outside the credit field, is necessary in this emergency situation. For example, controls should be applied in such a manner as to maintain the relative advantages presently available to veterans, and as total new construction is reduced an increasing proportion of that total should be concentrated in the field of moderate-and low-priced housing. Similarly, if it proves necessary to utilize in the construction area the priority powers contemplated in title I of the bill, controls over mortgage credit will have to be adjusted. In a defense economy, the application of credit restrictions must be consistent with the provision of adequate housing for defense workers.

Your committee firmly believes that the control of conventional real-estate credit and the control of Government-assisted real-estate loans must be closely coordinated and geared together so that there will be no discrimination against either. No controls should be designed to force lenders or borrowers to use Government-assisted programs. On the other hand, equitable treatment of those institutions and borrowers utilizing Government-insured or guaranteed loans requires that credit controls applied to conventional loans be as effective in reducing credit as those applied to Government-assisted loans.

Your committee deleted a section in title IV of the bill as introduced which would have permitted the Home Loan Bank Board by regulation to increase the liquidity requirements of members of Federal home-loan banks (up to a maximum of 20 percent of the institution's share capital, as compared to 8 percent under provisions to be effective on December 27, 1950, under existing law). Your committee feels that this authority would not result in a substantial contribution to credit control at the present time, as member institutions are currently holding 17 or 18 percent of their resources in liquid assets.

While your committee has not included in the bill it is reporting the control of commodity speculation, it is sympathetic with the objective of eliminating speculative gambling on commodity exchanges. Your committee, however, does recognize that within proper limits legitimate speculators play an important role in such markets. The problem is one that deserves very careful consideration, but the problems such legislation presents are so complex that it was impossible in a limited time your committee had to act on the more urgently required sections of the bill to work out satisfactory and adequate legislation on this subject. Your Chairman was therefore instructed by your committee to confer with the chairman of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee and recommend that it consider the commodity-speculation section of the bill and report to the Senate thereon.

use of selective controls and voluntary restraints, which are also designed to prevent an OPA.

While we do not oppose the provisions of the committee bill dealing with price and wage stabilization and consumer rationing, we believe the method outlined above to be preferable as a mechanism for instituting those controls. We believe it would be some measure of assurance that these extraordinary restrictions would not be imposed prematurely. We believe it to be a means of postponing the effect of inflation until the causes can be dealt with by restrictions on credit, coordinated with measures of monetary and fiscal reform.

We, nevertheless, support this bill, in the hope that the Congress will immediately enact tax increases at least sufficient to cover the new budget requests for increased military requirements; that the powers over credit given to the Federal Reserve Board in this bill and prior legislation will be exercised promptly and effectively; and that the credit and debt-management policies of other agencies will be coordinated with the purposes of this bill.

2D SESSION

S. 3936

[Report No. 2250]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 19 (legislative day, JULY 1), 1950

Mr. MAYBANK introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

AUGUST 7, 1950

Reported, under authority of the order of the Senate of August 4 (legislative day, July 20), 1950, by Mr. MAYBANK, with amendments

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, ~~That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as "The Defense Production Act of 1950".~~

~~TABLE OF CONTENTS~~

~~Title I. Priorities and allocations.~~
~~Title II. Authority to requisition.~~
~~Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.~~
~~Title IV. Control of credit and commodity speculation.~~
~~Title V. General provisions.~~

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense: Provided, That this authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, and (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid 50 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligation shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real-estate credit as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real-estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

~~(c) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:~~

~~(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory insurance service connected with any such goods or interest therein.~~

~~(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property (including leasehold and other interests therein); credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying such property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving such property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use such property.~~

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SEC. 403. The first sentence of section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as added by section 1 of the Act of June 27, 1950 (Public Law 576, Eighty-first Congress), is amended to read as follows: "No member of a Federal home-loan bank shall make or purchase any loan at any time when its cash and obligations of the United States are not equal to such amount as the Home Loan Bank Board shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That such amount shall not be less than 4 per centum or more than 20 per centum of the obligation of the member or withdrawable accounts or, in the case of any member insurance company, such other base as the Board may determine to be comparable."; and the last sentence of said section 5A is amended to read as follows: "This section shall be effective upon the enactment of the 'Defense Production Act of 1950'."

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 411. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market', as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E.) For the purposes of subparagraph (5) the term 'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of the Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this subparagraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean board of trade."

SEC. 412. Section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949

(Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress) is hereby amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "Notwithstanding any other provisions of this section, whenever the President so directs, sales of any commodity owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation may be made at the current support price for such commodity, when such support price is not below the market price, for the purpose of stabilizing the market, including the discouragement and prevention of undue speculation, fluctuation, and enhancement in price, and for the purpose of meeting unusual demand."

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) in the formation of any business advisory committees under this Act, consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provisions shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small business enterprises.

SEC. 502. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 503. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 504. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall be entitled, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration f this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 506. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 507. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title II of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title II of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act requested by the President, and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC 509. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 510. The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

SEC. 511. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 512. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as "The Defense Production Act of 1950".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. No person shall accumulate (1) in excess of the reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation. This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in section 101 of this Act.

SEC. 103. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that all other means of obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall promptly determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid promptly 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States, within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the President determines that property acquired under this title and retained is no longer needed for the defense of the United States, he shall, if the original owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, return such property to the owner; but, in any event, property so acquired and retained shall, if the owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, be returned to the owner not later than June 30, 1952. In the event the President and the original owner do not agree as to the fair value of the property, the fair value shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the President, one by the original owner, and the third by the first two appraisers; the expenses of such determination shall be paid in equal shares by the Government and the original owner.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be necessary to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts for the procurement of materials for the national defense.

(b) Any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System at the request of the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section, shall be subject to the supervision of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and to such regulations as it may prescribe; and the Board is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts for the procurement of materials for the national defense, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize such existing departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new agencies (other than corporations).

(b) Any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this subsection, the borrower may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at its option before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to June 30, 1952. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall not be less than the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of obligations hereunder.

SEC. 305. The President is also authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Commerce, or to any agency created under section 304, the administration and supervision of the rubber program (Rubber Act of 1948 as amended), tin program (Public Law 125, 80th Congress, 1947 as amended), and the abacá program (S. 3520, 81st Congress), now under the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, together with all functions, property, assets, funds, contracts, loans, liabilities, commitments, authorizations, allocations, personnel and records necessary in connection with such programs; but except as herein specifically provided this section shall not be construed to modify or repeal any of the Acts under which said programs are carried out.

TITLE IV

PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, inter-ferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 402. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) In order to carry out the objectives of this title the President may issue regulations and orders—to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this Act, shall be issued whenever an increase in such wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or property which is of importance to the national defense or which significantly affects the cost of living, where an excessive and inflationary rise in the price of such material or property has occurred or threatens to occur: Provided, That no ceilings may be imposed under this subsection on retail sales for household or personal use; and

(c) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsections (a) and (b), the President may issue regulations and orders—

(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material, service, or property; and

(2) stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this Act, shall be issued whenever an increase in wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph

(1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials, services and kinds of property, or with respect to materials, services and property generally, and in either event may include retail sales for household or personal use.

Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials, services, and property comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

(d) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials, services, and property, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material, service, or property, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or property or by persons performing the services, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In stabilizing wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(e) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials; and no ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified above. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such fresh fruit or fresh vegetables. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act.

(f) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Prices or rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility.

(g) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials, services, or property, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials, services or property, or transactions, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title: Provided, That this subsection shall not be applicable to any regulation required by section 402 (b) or 402 (c).

SEC. 403. At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of Title I of this Act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department.

SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 405 (a). It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material, service, or property, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 406. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material, service, or property, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 407. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this Act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That, upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recomendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 408. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title. The court may fix and establish a table of costs and fees to be approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, but the costs and fees so fixed shall not exceed with respect to any item the costs and fees charged in the Supreme Court of the United States. The court shall have a seal, hold session at such places as it may specify, and appoint a clerk and such other employees as it deems necessary or proper.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction, (1) to stay, restrain, or enjoin, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or (2) to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision; and no other court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to do so. There is reserved to the courts of general or other competent jurisdiction, except in the case of protests under this section and under section 407, the authority to pass upon the applicability of such regulations and orders. Such courts of general or other competent jurisdiction may pass upon the validity of such regulations and orders in cases otherwise properly pending before them.

SEC. 409. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(c) If any person selling any material, service, or property violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material, service, or property for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater:

(1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material, service, or property violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material, service, or property acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material, service, or property to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

TITLE V

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 503. In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and with other applicable laws.

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 601. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (hereinafter in this title referred to as the Board) is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 386, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 921), to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order Numbered 8843 (August 9, 1941).

SEC. 602. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the Board is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real-estate construction credit as, in its judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the Board are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this section or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the Board shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real-estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the Board pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the Board may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this section; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the Board as it may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this section, the Board by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this section to be registered; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the Board by order may suspend any such registration for violation of this section or any regulation prescribed by the Board pursuant to this section. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the Board in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this section, the Board may act through and may utilize the services of the Federal Reserve banks and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(d) For the purposes of this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the Board may in its regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, accounting and other terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section:

(1) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit, hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

SEC. 603. Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601 or 602 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 604. All the present provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters), shall be as fully applicable with respect to the exercise by the Board of credit controls under sections 601 and 602 as they are now applicable with respect to the exercise by the Securities and Exchange Commission of its functions under that Act, and the Board shall have the same powers in the exercise of such credit controls as the Commission now has under the said sections 21 and 27.

SEC. 605. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act with respect to loans on real estate made, insured, or guaranteed by any agency of the Government, the President may, after consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States Government, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions

shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 702. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but without limitation, vacation and holiday payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

SEC. 703. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary), and he may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court.

(b) The head of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this Act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this Act, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or to facilitate enforcement of this Act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act.

SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in this subsection, the district court for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the President, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited or willfully fails to perform any act required by the above provisions of this section, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year or both.

(e) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 706. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 708. (a) No act or omission to act requested by the President pursuant to this Act, and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General and the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this Act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent

he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

(c) The President is authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act to employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof, as authorized by section 55a of title 5 of the United States Code. Individuals so employed may be compensated at rates not in excess of $50 per diem and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses while so employed. The President is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(d) The President may utilize the services of Federal,

State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 712. (a) In order to carry out the purposes declared in section 2 of this Act, the President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, banking, insurance, and agriculture with a view to encouraging the making, by persons engaged in industry, business, financing, and agriculture, of voluntary agreements approved by the President—

(1) providing for allocation of transportation facilities and equipment;

(2) providing for priority, allocation and inventory control of scarce materials necessary for the national defense;

(3) providing for restrictions upon the extension by banks and financing institutions of credit that would contribute to inflation; or

(4) providing for regulation of speculative trading on commodity exchanges.

(b) The President is authorized to approve any such agreement which he finds will carry out any of the purposes declared in section 2 of this Act, except that he shall not approve any agreement unless such agreement specifically provides that it shall cease to be effective on or before June 30, 1952, and he shall not approve any agreement which provides for the fixing of prices.

(c) Whenever a governmental officer or agency determines that a plan of voluntary action with respect to any material or facility or the extension of credit is practicable and is appropriate to the successful carrying out of the policies set forth in this Act, that agency or official may request in writing compliance by one or more persons with such plan of voluntary action as may be approved by the Attorney General. Any act or omission by such person or persons in compliance with a written request made pursuant to this section and with a voluntary plan promulgated thereunder shall not be the basis at any time for any prosecution or civil action or any proceeding under the antitrust laws of the United States or the Federal Trade Commission Act.

(d) Such written request may, in the discretion of the governmental officer or agency which made the request, be withdrawn at any time by said governmental officer or agency, by written notice from said governmental officer or agency, of such withdrawal to the Attorney General, and after publication of notice of such withdrawal in the Federal Register as provided in subsection (e), the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission by reason of such request or voluntary plan.

(e) The Attorney General shall transmit to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and shall order published in the Federal Register, every such request, and any withdrawal thereof, and any plan, program, or other arrangements promulgated under, or which is the basis of, any such request.

(f) This section shall not be construed to limit in any way the authority or the exemptions conferred by section 708 of this Act.

SEC. 713. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production (hereinafter referred to as the committee), to be composed of ten members as follows:

(1) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and

(2) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman from among its members.

(b) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by this Act, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs. Upon request, the committee shall aid the standing committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any part of the programs authorized by this Act; and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. Any department, official, or agency administering any of such programs shall, at the request of the committee, consult with the committee, from time to time, with respect to their activities under this Act.

(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

(e) The expenses of the committee under this section, which shall not exceed $50,000 in any fiscal year, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made.

SEC. 714. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 715. Except as may be otherwise expressly provided in this Act, all powers and authorities conferred by this Act shall be cumulative and additional to and not in derogation of any powers and authorities otherwise existing. Notwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress, it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provisions of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this Act or its application to other persons and circumstances, but shall be confined in its operation to the provisions of this Act, or the application thereof to the persons and circumstances directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 716. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate; except that any agency created under this Act may be continued in existence for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed 60 days after such termination.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, provide for price and wage stabilization, provide for the settlement of labor disputes, strengthen controls over credit, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes."

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate will resume the consideration of legislative business.

MEETING OF SENATE IN OLD SUPREME COURT ROOM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 326) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses or adjourns on Friday, August 11, 1950, it be until Monday, August 14, 1950, and that on said day, and until otherwise ordered, it meet in the old Supreme Court room in the Capitol.

Resolved, That all rules relating to the Senate Chamber shall be applicable to the old Supreme Court room.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the President of the United States and to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there was some confusion in the Chamber when the resolution was read, but I understand that the resolution provides that the Senate shall meet in the old Senate Chamber beginning on August 14, and thereafter.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3936.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3936) which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is too late in the day for us to proceed further with the consideration of the bill. However it is my hope, and I know it is also the hope of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the distinguished chairman of the committee, that we can conclude action on the bill not later than Wednesday of next week.

A number of Senators have interrogated me with respect to the amount of time which will be consumed on consideration of the bill. Obviously I cannot tell. Certainly, however, I hope we do not take as long on this bill as we did on the appropriations bill.

That is all I desire to say at this moment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I send to the desk two amendments to the bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The amendments submitted by Mr. MAYBANK were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to say that I am hopeful, as is the distinguished majority leader, that we may conclude action on this measure next week.

Tomorrow the committee will be ready to proceed with the bill. I hope all Senators will give due consideration to the report on the bill. It was a rather hard job to finish the report by the time the committee finished its consideration of the bill, because there is so much legislative history pertaining to the bill. The report will be on the desks of Senators in the morning, and I hope all Senators will read it and will concur in the findings of the committee, to the end that we may promptly pass this measure, the early enactment of which is so necessary in connection with the present Korean situation and various conditions existing in the United States.

STATEHOOD FOR HAWAII AND ALASKA

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I had intended to make a statement at this time, but I ask unanimous consent to have it printed at this point in the RECORD, instead.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, Mr. BUTLER's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BUTLER

Yesterday, when the bills relating to statehood for Hawaii and Alaska were reached on the calendar call, the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and others took occasion to emphasize that in their judgment these bills should be brought up and passed. However, the Senator from Illinois mentioned that he did not want to have the statehood bills, if they should be brought up, displaced by the Mundt-Ferguson bill or other bills. The Senator said: "I should like to see either measure debated in the Senate upon its merits, without an attempt being made in the way of subterfuge of any kind whatsoever, without attempting to displace one of the bills with some other measure."

I would like to say that I have never made any objection to having these bills brought up at the proper time, provided, of course, that ample opportunity is permitted for full debate on their merits. I certainly do not believe that either bill should be passed without the most thorough discussion possible on the floor of the Senate.

However, let me say further that I simply cannot understand why the Senator from Illinois considers the popular demand that Congress take action on the Mundt-Ferguson bill as a subterfuge. Certainly a great majority of the people of this country considers action on the Mundt-Ferguson bill by this Congress to be extremely important. I suspect that very few members of the Senate agree with the Senator from Illinois that consideration of the statehood bills should be given priority over the Mundt-Ferguson bill. Judging from the tone of the President's message of yesterday, I am inclined to believe that even the leader of the Senator's own party considers that action against the Communist conspiracy within the United States is of the greatest importance.

One other point is worth mentioning. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] and other Senators laid some emphasis on the supposed military advantages of granting statehood to these two Territories at this time. I do not believe he will find that this supposed military advantage is very strongly supported by our military authorities. As I pointed out in my minority views on the Alaska bill, no military authority has at any time held that Alaska statehood is necessary for defense. Rear Admiral Ralph Wood, retired, who as Commandant of the Seventeenth Naval District was responsible for the naval defense of Hawaii during the war, stated flatly, and I quote: "In my opinion, it makes no difference whether Alaska is a State or a Territory as far as national defense is concerned."

Later on he said: "Were Alaska to become a State tomorrow, it would not alter, I am sure, the general over-all consideration of our defense problems.

"Be advised that I am not debating the merits of statehood. I am simply pointing out that the question of the national defense is not germane to the issue."

With respect to Hawaii, it certainly seems strange to talk about statehood being an asset to our national defense, at the very time when some of the union locals controlled by Harry Bridges are calling strikes and slowdowns, and in every other way doing anything they can to hamper the war effort.

I hope that when this question of statehood is brought up for consideration, if it is, that the discussion will not be clouded and confused by talk about any theoretical gain to our national defense. As a practical matter, the national defense is much more likely to be endangered and hampered by hasty action at this time. I hope consideration of these two bills will be confined to the real merits of their cases for statehood.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, August 10, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXAMINATION OF INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS TO MEET PRESENT EMERGENCY

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce my appointment today of a subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which will conduct a continuous examination of the preparedness of the industries under the committee's jurisdiction to meet the needs of the present emergency.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is keenly aware of its duties and responsibilities, under the Legislative Recrganization Act of 1946, to maintain constant watchfulness and oversight in the area of its legislative jurisdiction. Recognizing such responsibility, we have conducted many hearings and issued a number of reports on the defense phases of transportation, petroleum, and energy resources, and availabilities of materials, especially of steel, to meet the essential requirements of the industries which legislatively come under our jurisdiction.

The creation of this subcommittee specifically to handle the defense aspects of the committee's broad jurisdiction, is only further recognition of the increased gravity and importance of this subject.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is deeply mindful of the fact that such industries as rail, water, air, pipeline, and automotive transportation; telegraph, telephone, and radio communication; electric power, petroleum, and natural gas, are the very sinews of the Nation's economy and defense effort.

The committee equally is mindful of the fact—which may not generally be so well appreciated—that these very industries normally consume some one-half of annual steel production, two-thirds to three-fourths of petroleum production, two-fifths of soft-coal output, and up to four-fifths of total rubber consumption, to indicate only a few of the basic materials.

In designating this special subcommittee, I have in mind that it will consider not only the ability of the industries under our jurisdiction to fulfill whatever they may be called upon to furnish, but also the problems which they face in being supplied with the critical materials and manpower necessary for them adequately to perform.

Just as in 1941 and 1942, this committee, through a subcommittee under the chairmanship of Judge William P. Cole, made timely and helpful reports to the President and to the Nation on the rubber and gasoline situation, so today, I assume, one of the first items on our agenda will be thorough consideration of our capacity to meet increased competitive demands occasioned by new high-octane aviation gasoline, synthetic rubber, and chemical needs.

Another item of immediate concern is the allocation of steel for such fields as freight-car building, petroleum exploration, interstate oil and gasolines. A further item is the state of our medical care, facilities, and research to cope with emergencies, epidemics or bacterial warfare."

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning therof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9176, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Friday last, August 4, 1950, there was pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. STANLEY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINNON].

Without objection, the Clerk will report the Stanley amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STANLEY to the McKinnon amendment: On page 3, line 16, of the McKinnon amendment, after the word "differentials", strike out the semicolon and insert: "or (3) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by producers during the first 30-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I address myself as much to the gentleman from Kentucky as I do to the Chair—to ask whether the so-called Stanley amendment is or is not included in one of the committee amendments, which is to be offered.

Mr. SPENCE. It is included in one of the committee amendments which we intend to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. STANLEY] to the McKinnon amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 68, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ask that we immediately consider the amendment which I offered the other day and vote on it now. I would like to say in that connection that our committee spent some 6 hours yesterday in perfecting a wage and price control amendment on a bipartisan approach. It is heartening to see members of both parties working so cooperatively on a law which so vitally affects our entire economy. While the provisions of this committee action do not include all of the provisions I offered the other day and while I have several reservations as to the effectiveness of the committee amendment, the committee amendment is a move in the right direction, and I offer no objection to it.

In view of the urgency of getting this over-all mobilization bill reported out and in operation, I would like to see the membership go ahead and vote on my amendment and, if rejected, proceed to the consideration of the committee amendment, which is to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINNON].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the defeat of the McKinnon amendment defeat the Stanley amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. McKINNON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 30, after line 5, insert a new title as follows:

"TITLE II

"PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

"SEC. 201. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

"SEC. 202. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

"(b) In order to carry out the objectives of this title the President may issue regulations and orders—

"(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service which is of importance to the national defense or which significantly affects the cost of living, where an excessive and inflationary rise in the price of such material or service has occurred or threatens to occur; and

"(2) stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment in the industry producing or handling any material or providing any service upon which price ceilings have been established under paragraph (1) of this subsection; and regulations prohibiting increases in such wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this act, shall be issued whenever an increase in such wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(c) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsections (a) and (b), the President may issue regulations and orders—

"(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service; and

"(2) stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this act, shall be issued whenever an increase in wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally.

"Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

"(d) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this act. From time to time the President shall adjust ceilings, and in determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950: Provided, That no regulation or order shall contain any provision requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

"(e) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection.

"(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Acts of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

"(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by such producer during the first 30-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed; and no ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, how- ever, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

"(f) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

"(i) Rentals for real property;

"(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

"(iii) Prices or rentals for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

"(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

"(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility;

"(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

"(g) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

"SEC. 203. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

"SEC. 204. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

"SEC. 205. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

"SEC. 206. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

"SEC. 207. (a) At any time within 6 months after the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within 6 months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

"(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this act.

"(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

"(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

"SEC. 208. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

"(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such 30 days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

"(d) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

"SEC. 209. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 205 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within 1 year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge, or overcharges, if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

"(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

"(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"SEC. 210. As used in this title—

"(a) The word 'person' includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

"(b) The word 'materials' shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

"(c) The word 'facilities' shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

"(d) The term 'national defense' means the operations and activities of the Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

"(e) The words 'wages, salaries, and other compensation' shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but without limitation, vacation and holding payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bipartisan amendment. It is a committee amendment. It was voted out of committee by a vote of 21 to 1, 1 member voting "present." I think it is a happy solution of the problems that have been presented to us.

It provides first for voluntary controls of wages and prices. I think, when we are meeting conditions that now present themselves, that the patriotic spirit of the American people will go a long way to make and carry out voluntary agreement with reference to prices and wages. I think it is the logical way to proceed.

First, let the President see what he can do by voluntary agreements. I think he might accomplish much by that.

If that does not succeed, he can impose selective controls—selective controls on prices and on wages in the industry affected. If a price ceiling is placed on a commodity and threatened wage increases would interfere with the production of the commodity under the ceiling, ceilings may then be put on the wages to tie in prices and wages, in order that production may continue. In the event that both of those methods fail, then the President at his option, can exercise over-all controls.

It seems to me that this program is both logical and effective. We certainly need expedition in the passage of this bill. The greatest purchaser of commodities in the world is our Government. I remember how Secretary Stimson, when he was Secretary of War during the last war, appeared before our committee and urged that we see that prices did not rise and that there was not that vicious spiral of prices and wages chasing one another, which could only bring disaster to our country. It is absolutely essential that this bill go into effect to meet a condition that is steadily growing worse. You do not have to read the Bureau of Labor statistics. In your everyday life you know what is happening. You know that everything is rising in price all the time. You go into a restaurant, and you will find that the prices of meals are increasing. We must meet that condition. It is not only destructive to the welfare of the citizens, but it is destructive to the economy of the Nation.

I think that this bill admirably meets those conditions. I think it will be wisely administered by the President. We must place this discretion somewhere, and we have placed it in the Chief Executive of our Nation, who heads a coordinate branch of the Government and who is responsible to the people, as we are.

I am not going into the details of this intricate amendment. We have adopted much of the language that appeared in the Price Control Act during the last war. We have established an instrumentality that cannot only meet the conditions that exist now but is adapted to meet other conditions as they may arise. Nobody knows what those conditions will be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am in general agreement with the amendment. I wanted to ask the gentleman one question about selective price control and rationing. The thought occurs to me, for instance, in the case of meats, beef, pork, and lamb, that if controls were put on these items but not on poultry and poultry products there would be a reduction in the price or a switch in the type of consumption to those commodities that were not under control. It occurs to me that when you are going to impose a control on one line of foods you should control all others that could be used as substitutes.

Mr. SPENCE. I think the President in his discretion would not use the powers that were granted to him in a way that would give one producer an advantage over another. I do not believe it was intended to do that; I think it was intended in the ordinary production of manufacturers that where prices get out of line it would be possible to selectively control those prices; in other words, it would be not necessary to regiment our whole economy but to apply pressure only where it was most needed, and I think we could trust him not to depress the price of one agricultural commodity or one farm product to the benefit of another. We have got to put this discretion somewhere; these laws do not enforce themselves; there must be human judgment and discretion, and the only way it can be done is the manner in which it is done in this bill. I think it very desirable that the President be allowed to use selective price controls before he attempts to regiment the economy of the Nation. It may be that by the operation of this act we can avoid general price controls.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Then it is the gentleman's construction of the language now before us that when there is selective controls the President could use his authority to control articles that might be competitive in a certain field.

Mr. SPENCE. I think so.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I notice that there is exempt from control newsprint furnished newspapers. I am curious to know why newsprint is thus decontrolled when we know from the investigation conducted by the Committee on the Judiciary that newsprint per ton is now over a hundred dollars, almost a hundred-percent increase in price in the period of a decade, that there is a black market in newsprint that runs up as high as $250 per ton, making it very difficult for small papers to procure newsprint.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I might answer the gentleman from New York in this respect: On page 10 it is provided that the controls shall not be exercised with respect to prices or rentals for materials furnished for publication. It is limited to that extent and it does not include newsprint.

Mr. CELLER. I am glad to get that explanation.

Mr. SPENCE. Newsprint is not exempted from the controls.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is included in the controls, yes.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the destiny of our Nation is not entirely in our own hands; we have got to meet every emergency; we have got to do everything to strengthen our economy and to strengthen the very fabric of our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, in line 3, page 7, it is stated:

> No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950.

Should that not read that no wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at more than that point?

Mr. SPENCE. I think not. This is very fair. You have to have some standard, and this is a very fair standard. I certainly would not want to put a maximum on a salary that could be paid. It seems to me this is the proper way to do that.

Mr. NICHOLSON. If this wording is left in here, then the question of wages would not be frozen along with other costs. They could take not less than that. We would have a ceiling on the thing; then they could not go up.

Mr. SPENCE. I do not think that there should be a rigid statutory ceiling on wages under any circumstances.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The standard there is exactly the same as for agriculture.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes. I want to say that agriculture is well taken care of in this bill. The two Pace amendments are in the bill, the Stanley amendment is in the bill, and the Cole amendment is in the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] raised the question about the advance in the price of newsprint paper. He said it was 100 percent more than it was a decade ago. I do not have the exact figure for 1940, but I have the figure for 1938.

On January 31, 1938, we had $6,324,000,000 in circulation. On June 30 this year we had $27,156,000,000 in circulation, more than four times as much as we had in circulation in 1938.

Prices in a free economy are regulated by the volume of the Nation's currency and the velocity of its circulation. So that is not an unusual rise if newsprint has not gone up more than the gentleman from New York has indicated. It has not gone up as much as some other commodities.

Mr. SPENCE. That is what we are trying to fight in this bill, the vicious spiral of prices and wages. When the working man gets a raise in his wages it does him very little good because prices more than keep pace with it. He does not get any additional purchasing power. That is the reason a bill like this will give added strength to the country. It will bring contentment to the people and it is necessary for our national defense. The sooner we pass it in order that these controls may be put into effect, if necessary, the better it will be for all of us. It has already taken too long to put this act on the statute books.

The purchasing power of the dollar has depreciated so that those who work for wages, those who work for salaries, are at a great disadvantage. Those who are living on fixed incomes see their income disappear. The finest thing we can do is to stabilize the economy of our Nation and bring back to a certain extent the purchasing power of our dollars and to see that our Government is not defrauded in the great purchases it will make, because the Government will spend astronomical sums in the prosecution of the war. We can make the money it expends go very much further by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this amendment be considered as expeditiously as possible and that it be passed and put upon the statute books in order that the benefits that will accrue from it may come to the people immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

[Mr. WOLCOTT addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

(Mr. BROWN of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, up to this point I have advocated the passage of the bill recommended by out President, the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces; by Mr. Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board; by Mr. Evans, a member of the Federal Reserve Board; by the Secretary of Commerce; and by General Bradley. The bill reported by the House committee represents their views—that is, to authorize the President to requisition plants and facilities, to provide allocation of materials needed for the Armed Forces, and to tighten bank credits by curbs on installment buying. All this, they claimed, was needed immediately, and they opposed control of prices and wages at this particular time.

When the bill case to the House, as reported by the committee by a vote of 20 to 1, amendments were offered on both sides of the aisle to have control of commodities and wages immediately. The House undertook to write amendments to carry out this idea, but the longer we debated the control question the more confused the House became and saw the fallacy of trying to write a price- and wage-control bill on the floor. We adjourned last Friday to give the committee an opportunity to go into the control of prices and wages feature, which the committee did. All day Tuesday we discussed the different proposals submitted to the House last week and heard one or two witnesses. We finally voted out an amendment relative to control of prices and wages, something that was not considered at all during the hearings on the original bill reported to the House. We finally agreed to amend the original bill to provide a flexible and fair method in which to apply price and wage controls.

The amendment provides three different methods by which these controls may be applied. In the first place, the President can call in leaders of industry, labor, and agriculture and get them to agree on voluntary controls. I venture the opinion that unless the international situation becomes much worse voluntary controls will be all that are ever utilized.

If these should not be enough, however, the President may apply controls to any material which is of importance to the national defense. The President shall issue regulations prohibiting increases in wages or salaries whenever such an increase would require an increase on any material on which he has established a price ceiling. Clearly, for example, if he set a price ceiling on, say, steel, he would be required to control the wages of those people whose wages contribute to the price of steel.

Finally, as a last resort, and I cannot see this taking place for a long, long time, the President could place price ceilings on other materials. Here again he would be required to match price controls with wage controls. In the committee amendment, it is required that wages and salaries and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices have been established on commodities, materials, and services comprising a substantial part of all sales and materially affecting the cost of living.

I believe the committee amendment on price and wage controls is a fair middle-of-the-road approach to the problem. It provides for three different ways of dealing with the problem at three levels. As I have said before, we shall probably never get beyond stage No. 1.

The remaining titles of H. R. 9176 are substantially what the President has asked for to combat inflation. They are allocation and priority authority, the right to requisition, but only as a last resort, consumer credit control, and the authority to make loans for industrial expansion and production.

Everyone knows how I feel about controls. I am supporting this amendment on account of the three formulas to solve the problem, especially the first one of voluntary controls, and the further reason that my amendment was adopted to limit the law to June 30, 1951, instead of June 30, 1952. I take the position that at that time, if we need controls, we will need greater control than is provided in this amendment, or else we will not need any control at all. We will have sufficient time by then to pass another law if necessary. This amendment is a compromise between those who want all-out control on everything at once, and those who take a milder view of the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I have stuck to the original bill all along because our Commander in Chief wanted it. That is what General Bradley wanted, that is what Mr. Symington and the others wanted. They did not want further controls at this time because they realize the President has the machinery in the Commodity Credit Corporation to control food and clothing.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has an abundant supply of cotton, grain, and foodstuffs of all kinds and can sell these commodities in an orderly way and control the market on all food and on all clothing. Why do I say that? The Commodity Credit Corporation has title to 3,100,000 bales of cotton in the 1948 production and loans on 500,000 bales of 1949 cotton, which loan was due on July 1 last. In other words, they can place on the market at any time that 3,600,000 bales of cotton. The amount of cotton we have on hand now is around 7,500,000 bales, but the amount owned by the CCC, if sold in an orderly way, could prevent any inflation on cotton and, finally, clothing.

The carry-over of wheat is 470,000,000 bushels. The Commodity Credit Corporation has title to 334 000,000 bushels of wheat. The Corporation can sell this wheat in an orderly way and prevent inflation on wheat and bread.

The corn carry-over for the United States as a whole is in excess of 900,000,000 bushels. Of this amount the Commodity Credit Corporation has title to more than 300,000,000 bushels. The Corporation can sell this in an orderly way and prevent inflation on corn.

The Corporation has title to plenty of edible beans, in fact 9,500,000 hundredweight. The Corporation has title to 17,600,000 bushels of flaxseed; 37,700,000 hundredweight of grain sorghum; 12,600,000 bushels of oats; 857,000 hundredweight of dried peas; 88,000,000 pounds of dried eggs—three dozen to a pound.

There is 34 percent more cattle in feed lots this year than last year; the pig crop is one of the biggest in history. So there is plenty of corn to feed the cattle and the pigs, and there is no just reason for beef or pork to advance or be as high as it is if the corn surplus is sold in an orderly way.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has 192,000,000 pounds of butter; 348,000,000 pounds of milk and 97,000,000 pounds of cheese.

It is obvious to everyone why the President and the witnesses supporting the bill which was reported to the House were against control of prices and wages at this time, because the Commodity Credit Corporation can sell these commodities in an orderly way to prevent inflation on all foodstuffs and clothing.

Now I want to take all profit out of war, but our committee does not have the right to write a tax bill. That is for the Ways and Means Committee, and unless something is done on this line, I don't believe a price- and wage-control bill would have very much influence in preventing inflation. As stated before, if and when the people of the country know that we have an abundance of everything to eat and wear and the President cannot control high prices by voluntary controls, then he can and must try out the more rigid methods in controlling same which I subscribe to. So I agreed to go along with the bill under the formulas therein and let the President first try out voluntary controls.

Now the Commodity Credit Corporation can sell any or all of these commodities at a price fixed by law at 90 percent of parity, plus carrying charges and 5 percent, which amounts to about 97½ percent of parity. Who objects to that? No one, as long as they sell the commodities in an orderly way and this is the solution to reduce inflation on all foodstuffs and clothing.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McSWEENEY). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman just stated that he believes when we have price control we should also have wage control, and I agree with him. Does the gentleman understand that this bill provides for wage controls when we have price controls?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. This bill does provide for it in this way: The second formula is selective control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. If the President thinks that when he places a ceiling upon selective commodities, the conditions appear to him that wages will have to be raised, then in that instance it is his duty under this bill to put wages under control.

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman explain why the difference in the language, then? The Spence amendment provides on page 4 that the President may issue regulations and orders "establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee," and so forth, but when it comes to wages and salaries, on page 5 the amendment states, "Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally." In other words, it states that prices shall be placed under ceilings but wages shall be stabilized.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is the third formula. When he undertakes to put it on over all, if he puts it on a majority of the commodities he then has to stabilize wages by placing a ceiling on wages.

Mr. POAGE. Does the gentleman interpret the word "stabilize" to mean the same thing as to impose ceilings?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Absolutely. You stabilize by putting ceilings on them.

Mr. POAGE. Is it not a fact that in World War II we did place a ceiling upon prices, and that we stabilized wages at 15 percent above the figure that existed at the time we put the ceiling on prices? That was the Little Steel formula, was it not?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The President under authority given him now is not supposed to wait until a 15 percent rise. When a rise is threatened, it is his duty under this amendment to stabilize wages immediately by putting ceilings on wages at that particular time.

If the Commodity Credit Corporation will sell in an orderly way the commodities they have now in surplus they can keep prices from rising to an exorbitant height, and if the Ways and Means Committee sees fit to take unjust profits out of war, we will not have much inflation and this is one of the reasons I feel that this bill will prevent inflation by the exercise of the No. 1 formula, that is voluntary controls, and if it does not I feel justified in voting for the other formulas by which the President can try out selective controls and over-all controls.

I subscribe to the theory of some of the farm organizations that inflation is a condition which develops when the supply of money increases in relation to the supply of goods. Price and ration controls, at best, only suppress the symptoms of inflation. They invite black markets and require administrative personnel needed for production. They do not attack the problem of cheap dollars at its source, and actually decrease the supply of goods thus depriving the country of needed defense and the citizens of goods and services.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL to the Spence amendment: On page 3, line 5, strike out all of subsection (b) down to line 7 on page 4, and in line 8, page 4, strike out "subsections (a) and (b)" and substitute "subsection (a)."

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, our chairman has pointed out that there are three steps in the establishment of complete controls under the provisions of this bill.

If voluntary controls do not work, then we go into a phase of selective controls during which, if a control or ceiling is placed on the price of any commodity or manufactured article, then at the same time a ceiling can be placed on the wages paid to those employed in that particular industry which is manufacturing that commodity.

The third phase is a system of general controls under stand-by authority somewhat in line with that contemplated in the bill which I offered as a substitute several days ago. I am strongly opposed to selective controls and to postponing the day at which all prices and wages are frozen generally at one time. It seems to me if that is not put into effect in the near future then we will have passed the period in our economic pre-war development which would have given us the chance to institute such controls at all effectively. So in order to bring this proposal which we now have before us more in line with my thinking on the subject, and to offer those who are in accord with me another chance to express their views, I am offering this amendment which in substance cuts out the intermediate step of selective price controls. If this should not be done, I fear we would never manage to get out of this second stage. We would then be plagued with all the difficulties and evils which persisted through World War II and the post-war period.

In addition to everything else, I think this would be radically unfair to labor. A ceiling is only to be placed on wages in a factory which is making a commodity on which a ceiling has already been placed. Of course, the person who is working in that factory and making that commodity spends very little of his wage or his income on the purchase of that particular commodity. He is going to spend his wage or income for food and clothing and all of the other things which go to make up his cost of living. So that you are controlling his income at a time when you are not giving him the benefit of stabilizing his cost of living. Therefore, I think this would not only be radically unfair, but I think it would cause a great deal of discontent throughout the whole working population of the country because certain sections of it would be given unequal treatment as compared to other segments. This whole committee amendment which you are now considering would work out better if this intermediate step were cut out. Please keep in mind that I am not cutting out the period during which the President can attempt to stabilize by using voluntary controls. Personally I do not think the voluntary controls will work, and I am not at all keen about that section of the bill.

But I am not moving to strike it out because I think we can improve this bill, a great bill, by merely adopting this amendment of mine, which strikes out the intermediate steps. Having been defeated in several of my efforts to put the Baruch idea into operation, I am now trying to salvage as much as possible.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. May I say to the gentleman that I support him now on the amendment which he has offered today as I did in committee. I am in accord with the gentleman that selective price controls will not work and that once the Administrator attempts to place controls on a given commodity he thus begins to throw out of gear the economic picture of the country, and when he attempts to determine whether selective wage controls are necessary in order to stabilize the economy he will again find himself in difficulty. Therefore, I believe this second step is unworkable and should not be approved by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] has expired.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, there is one more point I should like to make before I yield further. That is with reference to the point that the gentleman from Michigan made that this whole amendment is substantially in line with that which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the other body and which in all probability will be adopted by the other body. If this subsection is stricken out, then the whole question will be thrown into conference. Meantime, until the conferees make final decision, we will have the benefit of the additional and more mature thinking which will occur on this subject. It might well be that when we go into conference we can emerge with a provision which is superior either to my suggestion or to the one embodied in the present bill. But if we do not accept this amendment, then we will probably not have that opportunity.

When the committee was writing this bill, my thought was to make it a different one from the Senate bill all the way through, partly in order to go to conference and then have an opportunity to adapt it there. We would have more time to get away from the confusion which has existed so far on this particular bill. We would have a wider base upon which to work and to adjust.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Some of us have not been able to follow where we would be if we voted for your amendment. Would the gentleman state in a few words, if your amendment were adopted, where would that leave the question of controls of commodities and wages?

Mr. KUNKEL. It would put it right into the third section, which is subsection (c), on page 4, where there would be general, over-all controls at which time it would be necessary to freeze wages generally and commodity prices generally.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. COX. And is that not in keeping with what was the apparent sentiment of this House when the matter was under consideration last week?

Mr. KUNKEL. It was my impression that more Members felt that way, and also that a considerable majority of the Members felt that it was absolutely necessary to have an immediate tie-in between wages and prices and services and commodities. When you put a ceiling on just one particular commodity and one particular wage, then in my judgment that is the most unfair thing you can do to the average working man in this country. It is complete discrimination between workers and business people, depending on their line of activity, at the whim of the President.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. In effect, your amendment eliminates the selective control feature and brings it down to two categories, merely the voluntary and the over-all?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes; and when it does that, the matter can be reconsidered, in all probability, in conference; whereas, if my amendment is defeated, the bills of the two bodies will be substantially in accord, assuming the other measure is accepted in its present form at the other end of the Capitol. There would be no opportunity whatever for any adjustment in conference in that event.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one more minute, that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman is speaking of selectivity. Is it not true that even under subsection (c) there would be complete latitude of selectivity, and that ceilings might be imposed on any and all commodities.

Mr. KUNKEL. As I read that, it is not quite the way the gentleman indicates, because when it becomes necessary to impose controls over a substantial part of the economy, then I think it is necessary under subsection (c) to make general controls, and to tie in wages. I am not so sure of the language. No part of this Spence amendment—title II—was written by me. I am only trying to strike out what I think is a particularly bad feature. I do not like this new title II as well as I do the corresponding sections in the proposal which I offered myself, but I do believe subsection (c) goes a long way toward meeting the objections that many Members had.

Mr. HARDY. Can the gentleman point out any language in subsection (c) which would indicate there would be general application or necessarily on more than one commodity?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes; in lines 6 to 10, on page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] has again expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the committee very carefully considered this amendment, which is title II, now being considered by the Committee of the Whole. After thorough consideration and after debating a number of amendments, including the approval of two offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], one by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. STANLEY], and one by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], we agreed on this amendment by a vote of 21 for it and only 1 against it. There was only one vote in the Committee on Banking and Currency against title II that we are now proposing to be inserted in this bill.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. The gentleman is correct that that was the vote on the over-all amendment. However, when the specific amendment which I offered and which is similar to the one I am now offering, was before the committee, there were four votes in favor of it.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the gentleman did not give me time to get to that. There was one vote against this title, and when we were considering this title the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered the same amendment in the committee that he is now offering. After thorough and full debate and discussion the committee voted on the gentleman's amendment. It received 4 votes with 17 against it. So I submit that after the committee has so thoroughly gone into this matter and has voted by such a large majority against it, that the Committee of the Whole should now defeat the proposal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

This will eliminate the second step, or the second gear in this three-gear bill which provides: First, voluntary controls. If we knew that we were in a period when it was necessary to have all-out mobilization naturally we could eliminate gear No. 1 and gear No. 2 and go into high gear immediately if rigid controls were necessary; but we are not convinced yet that strict and rigid controls and regimentation are absolutely necessary. Therefore these three gears are set up. No. 1, voluntary controls; No. 2, selective controls which will permit the President to deal with certain items and certain commodities, and along with it wages as well as prices; that is No. 2. No. 3 is strict and rigid controls involving the severest kind of regimentation. We want to avoid No. 3 if we can. If the emergency does not become so great as to justify No. 3 it is our hope that we shall never have to use it. Therefore we should keep voluntary No. 1 in and we should keep No. 2 in because it is possible that by using No. 2 we will never have to resort to the rigid regimentation under No. 3. So let us try No. 2; let us not strike it out. I plead with you not to strike it out in view of the fact that it was so thoroughly considered after thorough debate on two tests, one test 21 to 1 and another test 17 to 4 against this amendment.

So I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment be defeated.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. There is just one point at which I must disagree with the gentleman from Texas and that is on the matter of long and thorough consideration. The Members of the House, I am sure, know how much time the committee had to discuss this whole bill and how much time they must have spent on this amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. I am sorry the gentleman is not staying by our bipartisan agreement. You know, this is a bipartisan bill. He is all by himself on this whole title on the committee. I hope he will not insist on disrupting and revoking our bipartisan agreement to get a good bill.

Mr. KUNKEL. That is just what I am trying to do. There was a bipartisan agreement to get a good bill. I am trying to get a good bill; the other 20 are against me.

Mr. PATMAN. Everybody is out of step but the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Since we did thoroughly consider it yesterday and also this morning I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. KUNKEL. When did we consider it this morning, my amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. I will not take issue with the gentleman on that score.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LYLE. With all the debate that has gone on concerning this subject during the last week, with all the amendments that have been presented and the arguments advanced, it seems absolutely ridiculous to me to overlook the possibility of this phase of control and to say that you must go into rigid regimentation even though the circumstances do not justify it.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think we all know that we are faced with a situation that either requires controls or it does not; either we have a serious situation, one in which we ought to try to stop inflation even though it may require each of us to make some sacrifice, or we ought to do nothing about it and retain our liberties. You cannot have controls without some infringement upon the individual liberties of the citizens. We should not adopt controls lightly. If our problem of defense is not serious, if our boys are on a picnic in Korea, then we should not consider controls. But if we are faced with a serious situation, as I think we are, if we are faced with a problem which may determine our very existence as a nation, then we ought to take whatever steps that are necessary to meet that problem. One of the most important of those steps is to prevent run-away inflation. We can neither finance our necessary rearmament or protect our liberties if we allow inflation to destroy our savings and the buying power of our money.

You cannot prevent inflation after it has occurred. You can put out a fire when it has just started, but you cannot prevent the fire after it has burned the house to a pile of embers. We have the opportunity of putting out the fire now before it burns the house down. If we wait to turn the hose on the flames it will soon be too late.

Oh, we can sit around and wait until after the election if a majority of the Members of the House feel they are afraid to meet this issue now. We can wait until after November, but if we do, we need not talk of stopping inflation; our economic house will by that time have been so far consumed that we will have to wait for the ashes to cool. If we wait, the United States Government will pay hundred of billions of dollars more for its defense effort. Our citizens will have the value of their money destroyed and that goes for the most humble worker as well as the most opulent investor. It will destroy the value of bonds, it will destroy the value of life insurance, it will destroy the value of pension payments, and it will destroy wages if you let this inflation proceed. Of course, under such circumstances, wages are going up and they should go up. I want to make it abundantly plain that, in my opinion, if we allow prices to go up we should allow wages to go up. It is my feeling that we should stop increases in both wages and prices and stop them now. The time to stop them is before they have gone up, not after. You cannot roll them back.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. There is one question every Member should keep in mind in voting on this matter and that is if you think we are going to have controls eventually then you ought to vote for this kind of control now. If you do not think we are going to have controls eventually then you should postpone the whole thing.

Mr. POAGE. That is right; but I am afraid the thinking of a great many Members on both sides of the aisle is that they do not want to vote for controls until after the elections in November. Frankly, I want to vote for control when it will do some good, while it will affect inflation, when it is not too late. The question is whether you are interested in stopping inflation or whether you are interested in stopping somebody from voting for somebody else.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, I do not agree with the gentleman that any Member is voting for this amendment and waiting until after elections for control. The gentleman should consider that it will take several months to get enforcement into operation and we need this time. This No. 2 will give us an opportunity to keep down speculation and inflation to some extent while we are setting up the necessary machinery.

Mr. POAGE. Of course, if I agreed with the gentleman that Nos. 1 and 2 had any beneficial effect, I would have to agree with his conclusions. We are told here you should first try voluntary controls. What are we trying today? We have had voluntary control ever since the day the North Koreans crossed the thirty-eighth parallel. There has been just as much voluntary control as there is going to be after the bill is passed, and it has accomplished just exactly as much as voluntary control is going to accomplish. It has let the cost of living go completely out of line. Voluntary controls have not and are not going to do anything more. They are just so much hogwash and the people know it whether the Committee does or not.

Then the gentleman says we should have selective control. For what? Why should we not try to stop the general rise in the cost of living now rather than to say if the price of John Smith's product goes up that we will control it, but if Jim Jones raises prices on his product that will be all right? Are we to say that we will put a ceiling price on brick and none on cement? Do not we know that brick would go off the market and cement blocks would go up? Every time you push down on one end of the balance the other end is coming up. There are just as many buyers as there are sellers. You cannot talk about everybody buying and everybody selling because every time there is a sale there is both a buyer and a seller. You are not going to stop inflation by pushing some prices down and letting others go uncontrolled. You must control all prices if you are to keep goods on the market at fair prices.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SMITH of Virginia). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. It seems to me that it should be pointed out, too, if the gentleman agrees with me, that under the Kunkel amendment, even if adopted, it is still not a mandatory price and wage control bill, because the President still acts under subsection (a) and tries to bring about voluntary action.

Mr. POAGE. I agree with the gentleman that the Kunkel amendment does not go nearly far enough. I agree that the Kunkel amendment is not a solution, but it does eliminate one weak link in the bill. There are other weak links and I would like to eliminate them all, and I would like to go further and strike at the roots of this inflation. Right here, Mr. Chairman, I want to make it plain that I am not one of those who believes that either price or wage controls will cure inflation. These controls can help to mitigate the hardships imposed by inflation. Inflation has got to be stopped by taxation. You have to levy taxes, and I mean taxes; I do not mean five or eight billion dollars; I mean fifteen or twenty billion dollars; I mean enough taxes to pay for all of the expenses of Government. If you have not got nerve enough to vote those taxes, do not go home and talk about how you voted to stop inflation, because you cannot stop the fire of inflation and leave the fuel to build the fire lying around. Somebody will throw that fuel on that fire and rekindle the blaze. No, I voted last week for the excise profits tax which was proposed and I expect to do so again. I want to control profits as well as wages and prices. I think we must control all three. No one should escape.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ANDREWS. I want to say that I want to concur in what the gentleman has said. I do not think warning will do any good to keep prices down. I would like to tell you about a letter I got from a farmer.

Mr. POAGE. I am sorry, I cannot let the gentleman tell about that because I only have a moment or two left. If the gentleman has a question, I will try to answer it.

I want to call your attention to this fact that neither the Kunkel amendment nor this bill actually tie wages and prices together. The wording of the bill is different in regard to wages and prices; it puts a ceiling on prices and it stabilizes wages. We had stabilization of wages in the last war and they were stabilized at 15 percent above what they were at the time when we froze prices. Now, stabilization of wages at 15 percent above the freeze on the price level does not bring about anything but a black market and the disappearance of goods from the legitimate dealer. If you want to do what the American people want and what I believe this Congress wants, let us meet the problem squarely and actually tie wages and prices together, and let us tie them both as of the day this thing started. Let us not talk about doing something after the election. The Koreans did not wait until after the election, and you cannot wait until after the election either, and have any value left in your pay envelope, your life insurance policy, or your bonds.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I know that everybody wants to vote on this and you are probably tired of it. But, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of my committee, whom I have a great deal of admiration for. On page 7, section 2, says that no wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than between these two decks. That should read "more." The reason it should read "more" is because whether or not we give this power to the President or not does not make any difference because the President immediately hands it over to somebody else to administer, and they make the rules and regulations; they go along with it. Now, if we are going to pass a law here, let us say that it shall be no more than the price paid between May 24 and June 24. Let us say it, and then we clip the wings of these people who have been trying and will always try to be greedy and avaricious and make money on the miseries of mankind. If we are going to send our men and boys to fight our battles, let us get on the same plane with them. This may be all right.

I have been informed that this is the same thing that was written into the old OPA bill. The OPA failed, and we know that it failed. We of the younger generation and maybe the older generation should get a lesson from it, but we should put "more" in there and put everybody on the same plane.

I was given this information by a gentleman from Arkansas, a prominent member of the Committee on Ways and Means. I do not want to tell you his name because I circulate around here and ask people that know twice as much as I do about what their opinion is. I try to do that. But under this bill you are not going to have any controls at all, because you put "not less than" rather than "not more than."

I do not want to talk about my fishermen, for they are not in this bill at all, but if they were, if you caught a codfish sometime between May 24 and June 24 you could not go less than 4 cents for that codfish, but you could go to 20 cents if you wanted to under this bill. I think everybody that has any common sense knows it.

I do not want to be an off-horse, Mr. Chairman. I want to go along with my committee, but I want my committee to use common sense. I do not want them to write a bill based on the old OPA, that was a miserable failure.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to vote against this bill and to vote against my committee, because they are not willing to change something for more or less. We Yankees always said, "Well, we will accept that proposition more or less."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto close at 3:45.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield for a parliamentary inquiry, I should like to know how many amendments are at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Four amendments to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky this morning are at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe we have to take another look at the proceedings of last week and the situation as it is in 1950 to get into true perspective the situation today and what we are trying to do here as a committee and what we have recommended here to the Committee of the Whole.

The situation in 1950, as compared to the prewar year of 1941, is certainly not analogous because at this time our economy is capable of producing $100,000,000,000 more in terms of gross national product than it was 10 years ago. Therefore, from all indications at the present time, 90 percent of the total output of this Nation can be used for civilian purposes, and our needs are for merely 10 percent for defense purposes. We will not attain that point until the end of this year 1950. Whereas in 1940–41 we had to go into an all-out war productive effort when 50 percent of our economy was devoted to the military effort and 50 percent to the production of civilian goods. Now we have devised this method of three progressive steps as being the most practical step to move from the process of voluntary stand-by authority into selective price controls. The nature of our integrated economy today compared to what it was 10 years ago must be taken into full consideration.

To get this in true perspective we have to alter our thinking in terms of our economy today and not in terms of the situation prior to World War II. I believe we are dwarfing our outlook and confusing our thinking in terms of what the situation was then. In the light of the experience we have had in World War II and in the period following World War II and the experience we have had with controls, I believe that this practical step is most essential and necessary.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. If you take these three progressive steps then that absolutely insures that we are going to get in the same mess in this war as we got into in World War II. That is the reason I object so strenuously to this method.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is taking the most pessimistic view and my viewpoint, of course, is based upon the facts and experience as they are today and have been related to this committee by those who know and are able to reveal to us certain information which we, of course, are not privileged to reveal here to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. FELLOWS. The economy may have changed as the gentleman indicates, but human nature is just the same as it was in 1940, is it not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. But our capabilities in being able to supply the needs and wants of human nature, as I have stated, have greatly increased and we are today able to produce $100,000,000,000 more in the way of goods and services, so far as the needs of the Nation are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I understand the gentleman, as a representative of the committee, intends to rephrase the language on page 10, subdivision 3, with reference to newsprint so that beyond peradventure of a doubt, as that language will be rephrased, newsprint will be under control; is that correct?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not the intent to cover newsprint in this exemption. I may say to the gentleman from New York in the original amendment as offered by me, I numbered various sections and it reads now, on page 10, line 5, "prices or rentals for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service—comma." And then to separate that particular section I had it numbered. So it is the intention of the committee to offer "Sub (a)" and "Sub (b)" to precede these two points so that there will be no question about the remaining part of that particular No. 3 section. It certainly is not my intention that newsprint be excluded or exempted.

Mr. CELLER. I understand the power of the press, and how that power, undoubtedly, under the original OPA and in this bill was exercised, so that there will be no ceilings on advertising rates by publications, including newspapers; but why is there no control on outdoor advertising? It has nothing to do with the freedom of the press. It has nothing to do with the press. Is the power of outdoor advertising companies so great that they have no control on what they sell?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is a medium for dissemination of information. Of course, we were trying to include all those agencies engaged in the dissemination of information. That is why it was included in the original amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the committee amendment, and all amendments thereto, close at 4 o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota), there were—ayes 118, noes 30.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will state it.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. What is the fate of the amendments at the desk? I have an amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be read and disposed of whether there is a chance for debate on them or not.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I have an amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be reached in due course.

Mr. NICHOLSON. In the reading of all the names mine was not called. Does that mean I am not entitled to say a word on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. We have 46 names on the list with 40 minutes for debate. That will be a little less than 1 minute each.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. In recognizing Members under the limitation of debate will the Chair recognize first those who have amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to do so insofar as possible.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will I be permitted to say something on the amendment I intend to offer?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have about three-quarters of a minute, but if we have these continued interruptions, it will mean that the gentleman's time will be correspondingly cut down.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEAN. May I be heard on the Kunkel amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for three-quarters of a minute.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, in 1941, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] was also a strong advocate of selective controls. Six of us then on the Banking and Currency Committee voted for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] which would have provided for over-all controls, but we were beaten in committee and in the House we only got 87 votes. Selective controls proved to be a failure, and in October 1942 the President recommended and the Congress passed a bill providing for over-all controls thereafter. Owing to the mistake of those who thought as did the gentleman from Texas in 1941, the people of the United States and the Government during the war years paid billions more for what they needed than they should have.

Selective controls have failed in past history; they will fail now. So I support the Kunkel amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] is recognized.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FELLOWS and Mr. GUILL yielded their time to the gentleman from Minnesota.)

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, probably most of the Members of this body will vote on an issue like that presented by the Kunkel amendment in terms of their analysis of the present world situation. In my view it is sufficiently serious that it will take almost a miracle to get us through it without ultimately requiring full controls over our economy. Therefore, if there is to be error, I would rather err on the side of doing too much too soon than on the side of too little too late which has been our procedure too often in the past. If we do the former and it does not prove to have been necessary, then we will have been guilty of nothing but undue caution, we can and will promptly take the controls off and no damage will have been done. But if we do not take action now that events prove necessary, then we will have been derelict in our duty to the point of endangering the very survival of our country as a free republic.

If I have time I would like to make one more point. It has been argued that if we freeze clear across the board which is the way that causes least discrimination and least inequity to all groups and provides the greatest workability, we will get our economy so regimented that we will never be able to get the controls off.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the best way to make sure that we can end controls when they are no longer necessary is to freeze everything clear across the board as of a period prior to the Korean invasion. Then everybody will want to end them just as soon as possible; labor will want to end them; merchants will want to end them; farmers will want to end them; everybody will want to end them if everybody is under them. But if under the selective system of step 2, the President freezes only a portion of the economy, many who are not frozen will not want controls taken off those who are frozen because it is to their advantage to have others restricted while being free themselves. Labor will want the controls kept on business, or business will want them kept on labor, and so on. Partial controls will be far harder to get removed than full controls.

Mr. Chairman, the way to be most equitable to everybody in putting on controls, and to produce the most effective stabilization, is to do it clear across the board at the outset and then, as soon as it proves possible or advisable, they can be relaxed or removed step by step.

Let us not once more gamble with the welfare of our country by half-way measures that are unlikely to work. Let us not edge into this difficult problem backward; let us look it straight in the face and do it the fair way right now. The Kunkel amendment does not do all I believe should be done and in the end will have to be done, but it is a long step in the right direction and adoption of it will make clear the views and wishes of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KUNKEL) there were—ayes 94, noes 70.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. BUCHANAN and Mr. KUNKEL.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 118, noes 96.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

(Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. SCUDDER asked and were given permission to yield the time allotted to them to Mr. COLE of Kansas.)

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of Kansas to the Spence amendment: Page 8, line 14, after the word "processing" insert the following: "Provided further, That no ceilings shall be established or maintained on products resulting from the processing of cattle and calves, lambs and sheep, and hogs, the processing of each species being separately considered, which, taken together, do not allow for a reasonable margain of profit to the processing industry as a group on each such species."

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it is fortunate that in the past we have had some experience in connection with the operation of price controls and ceilings. In the original OPA law the processors of livestock, such as beef, calves, lambs, sheep, and hogs found that price controls were placed on their products in such a manner as to work a hardship. Prices were fixed by determining the processor's profit on his entire operation. For instance, a processor slaughtering lambs and cattle was required to determine under the original law whether or not he had a profit upon his entire operation. If he had a profit on his entire operation but a loss on processing one item, he could not charge a price sufficient to pay the cost of processing the profitless item. This amendment would permit the processor of these livestock items to fix his price upon the cost of processing each individual item or species. For instance, he may then have a price fixed upon the cost of processing lambs, upon the cost of processing cattle, and upon the cost of processing hogs individually and not as a group. In 1945 a food study committee reported on this proposition. This committee was headed by Senator Clinton P. Anderson, and had as its other members, Mr. Pace, Mr. Clements, Mr. Gorski of Illinois, Mr. August H. Andresen, Mr. Herter, and Mr. Holmes of Washington. They had this to say:

> Fair and equitable margins should be established in every operation of the production, processing, and distribution of meat with special incentives for feeders of cattle to produce better and heavier beef, due consideration being given to the over-all feed situation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it not a fact that this situation was taken care of in 1945 by the Barkley-Bates amendment, which is the amendment the gentleman is offering?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Yes. The amendment I am offering was offered by the then Senator BARKLEY and Representative Bates. It permitted the producers of livestock to get a fair price for their commodity. It permitted them to know in advance that they would be able to receive a fair price in the future, and thus brought into production a greater supply of meat.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. DEANE and Mr. JACKSON of Washington asked and were given permission to yield the time allotted to them to Mr. MONRONEY.)

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has little or nothing to do with the raisers of livestock. It is not an amendment to protect the farmers or the cattle raisers.

It is, in its entirely, an amendment for the packing industry and if passed, will insure greater than normal profits to the larger members of this industry.

Much of the complaint we are receiving is about the high cost of meat in the cost of living index. It is not the cattle raisers who are getting this increase, but somewhere along the line after the farmer sells his livestock, the increase is occurring. We can be certain that the consumers of this Nation do not think that the price of meat is too low when they buy it at the stores.

The large number of animals on the farms of America testify to the health of the livestock industry. As long as there is a good demand for meat, these raisers of livestock will not suffer. It is ridiculous to think that they will.

There is another section in this bill that gives ample protection to the meat processors to provide that ceilings will reflect a profit to them on their business operations.

This amendment goes further than that. It seeks, not only to insure an over-all profit on the plants operation, but also will permit price increases on any classification of livestock if the profit on each individual type of meat processing does not show an ample profit.

The entire plant could, under this amendment, be making ample profits on its over-all operation, but would still be given higher prices if it could show that on one single classification of meat processing it was not in an ample profit position.

This amendment was brought into the picture late in the closing days of OPA when there was vast withholding of meat supplies from the livestock markets. It was put in in the other body. I never thought it was a good amendment—I do not think it is a good amendment now.

If you allow the packers to make not just a reasonable profit on their over-all operations, but then raise prices even higher because on one specific commodity they are not showing their usual normal profit on that one specific line, you are setting a precedent that all industry will have a right to ask for as well.

In ordinary business practice, the manufacturer or processor looks to his entire operation to see if it yields a satisfactory profit. Some lines lose, some make a profit, some break about even.

In setting ceilings on prices, if every item out of a thousand in industrial lines, is to be guaranteed in individual and specific profit, as well as the over-all profit position for the entire business, you will never be able to set ceilings that will not be subjected to continual upward change.

Such amendments as this will set a pattern for a continual upward movement and will make inflation control impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, one cannot say a great deal in three-fourths of a minute. However, I am surprised that the gentleman from Oklahoma has argued against the amendment before us. I am sure that he does not favor black-market operation, but by asking for the defeat of the amendment he will encourage the reestablishment of the black market in meat.

The Cole amendment, before us, is identical with the Barkley-Bates amendment adopted to the OPA Act in 1945. It was also adopted by the House, as it was then recognized that several thousand small slaughterers were being driven out of business because OPA price regulations compelled them to sell their processed meat at a loss. Many went out of business. Others engaged in black-market operations. As you will remember, a situation developed where most consumers could not buy meat in legitimate channels at ceiling prices. The Barkley-Bates amendment was adopted to correct this situation, by requiring the OPA to provide a reasonable margin of profit for slaughterers on each type of livestock. A large percentage of the Nation's slaughterers of meat do not have any side lines, which would permit them to make up their losses on livestock from such other sources.

Mr. Chairman, there are three different groups that urge price control and rationing of meat and other necessities. The first group consists of those who honestly feel that they will be hurt because of inflationary price rises. The second group consists of those officials and individuals who are again anxious to control the business and the economy of the United States. And, the third group consists of the old black-market ring, with headquarters in New York, who sit on the side lines waiting to take over, especially in the meat line. They made hundreds of millions of dollars during the recent war, and they are getting ready to operate again. The Cole amendment is designed to stop black market operations in meat. Its adoption will permit all slaughterers to operate and supply all kinds of meat at ceiling prices to consumers through legitimate channels.

I urge the adoption of the amendment so that we can get an adequate supply of meat for the consumers through normal, legitimate channels.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] to the Committee amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLE of Kansas) there were—ayes 72, noes 108.

Tellers were demanded by Mr. COLE of Kansas and Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. COLE of Kansas and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 86, noes 125.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLSON to the Spence amendment: On page 7, line 4, strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more."

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I made a speech a couple of hours ago on this same subject. I was going to let it drop, but a great many of the Members thought that we ought to take a vote on it. That is, whether or not we should make the provision in this bill more or less. Under the provisions of this bill any department, or anybody whom the President might designate, could make the basic price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON] to the Spence committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLSON) there were—ayes 40, noes 96.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POAGE, of Texas, to the Spence amendment: On page 4, line 9, of the committee print No. 2, after the word "orders", strike out the dash and insert the words "at the same time both".

Page 5, line 15, strike out the word "stabilizing" and insert the words "establishing a ceiling or ceilings."

(By unanimous consent Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. ABERNETHY yielded their time to Mr. POAGE.)

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides that the same language shall prevail as to the establishment of ceilings on prices and as to the establishment of ceilings on wages. It uses the same wording. The pending committee amendment uses different wording. Members of the committee have suggested that it would make no difference which wording was used, whether it were "ceiling" or "stabilizing." I am not prepared to say whether it would make a difference or not, but I do know that the wording is not the same, and I do know that everyone says that it is our intention to provide the same treatment for prices and wages. I know that the same treatment should be provided. For that reason I voted against the last amendment, because I think that you should give to the wage earner the same protection you give to the man who produces agricultural commodities or industrial goods. On the other hand I think that you should not give one class any special privilege whether that class be farmers, wage earners, or industrialists. I think that this is a war in which all of us are interested, in which all of us have a common stake; and I believe all should be given the same treatment. If you adopt this amendment the provision will read that the President may issue regulations and orders at the same time, both establishing ceilings and ceiling prices for retail goods and establishing ceilings and ceiling prices on wages, salaries, and so on.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I have talked to one or two Members of the committee, and they have told me that they intended for each group to be treated equally. This being true I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. POAGE. Practically everyone who has spoken this afternoon has said they intended for all groups to be treated alike. That is all I ask. My amendment simply makes the wording read the same for all groups.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, it ought to be apparent to everyone that this House and the country want a stronger law than that which has been proposed. The committee bill is subject to the criticism of giving a political treatment to a war problem and reflects credit upon no one. It is pussyfooting and soft-pedaling to the *n*th degree. The pending amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] to the Spence committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN) there were—ayes 146, noes 71.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio to the Spence amendment: Page 2, after line 21 of the Spence amendment, insert a new section:

"SEC. 2. (a) The purpose of this section is to impose temporary ceilings immediately on all prices and wages so as to prevent runaway inflation in the period immediately following the enactment of this act while measures are being perfected under the other provisions of this act to control inflation over a longer period.

"(b) The maximum price for which any article may be sold or which may be received for the performance of the services, and the maximum wage which may be paid for labor shall be the highest price received by the seller for the same or substantially the same article, or received by the person performing the services or the same or substantially the same labor, immediately following enactment of this act, and if no such article was sold or services or labor were performed on or before this date, then the maximum price shall be the sale price of the most nearly equivalent article, services, or labor: Provided, That whenever the President shall issue any regulation or order establishing any ceiling authorized by title IV of this act such regulation or order shall immediately become effective irrespective of this section.

"(c) The President shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he considers necessary to carry out the purpose of subsection (b). Whoever willfully violates this section or any such regulation shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

(Messrs. H. CARL ANDERSEN and BROWN of Ohio asked and were given permission to yield the time allotted to them to Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio.)

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to freeze where we are now, in order to stop the sudden expansion of wages, of prices, and of everything else, in order to avoid the mistakes we made in the last war period. Such action would do just exactly what might and should have been done by Executive order or by emergency congressional action immediately following the attack upon South Korea. As that was not done, I am suggesting that the committee use the wisdom of hindsight and pass this single amendment as a temporary measure to prevent the spiraling of prices during the period which, according to many who have spoken this afternoon, may be of some duration. It goes without saying that there will be a period during which the machinery involved in this bill will have to be set up. Passage of my amendment will give the people of this country the protection they have every right to expect this Congress to provide. I urge this Committee to pass this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio) there were—ayes 66, noes 94.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

(Mr. DOLLINGER asked and was given permission to yield the time allotted to him by Mrs. DOUGLAS.)

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. DOUGLAS: Page 3, line 10 of the committee amendment, after the word "receipt", insert "or the rental."

Page 3, line 11, after the word "material", insert "or property."

Page 3, line 14, after the word "material", insert "or property."

Page 4, line 13, after the word "receipt", insert "or the rental" and after the word "material", insert "or property."

Page 10, strike out all of line 3.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the language which the gentlewoman seeks to offer her amendment to has been stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The language on page 3 has been stricken from the bill, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order against that portion of the amendment. As to the rest of it, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I have offered is an amendment to give to the President the power to stabilize rents along with everything else if and where controls are necessary. Rent is the largest item in the cost-of-living budget of the average family; therefore, if we are sincere about wanting to stabilize living costs and controlling inflation, we certainly must turn our attention to rents. I think the amendment is clear, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. There are pending several amendments and the Chair will recognize Members who desire to offer those amendments, but there will be no debate.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLOOD: Page 1, line 2, insert a new section as follows:

"EXCESS PROFITS CONTROL

"SEC. 201. It is the intent of Congress that all corporations engaged in the manufacture of war material or other services connected with the war effort and for the Defense Production Act of 1950 shall be taxed at the rate of 100 percent of all profits above normal peacetime profits."

Mr. WOLCOTT (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Clerk has read sufficient to indicate that this amendment is a revenue measure and not germane to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an amendment to introduce tax legislation into this bill. If my distinguished friend from Michigan had listened until the amendment was read or if he had paid attention even to the part that had been read, he would have heard very clearly, in my best English, that this is a mere declaration of intent. Under the declaration of policy in the original Spence bill there is ample language, sufficiently elastic, to permit at this time, under the committee amendment now introduced, the insertion by amendment of a new section, before price or wage stabilization, calling only for a declaration of intent.

Mr. Chairman, every speaker that I have heard says that he is in favor of controlling excess profits. I think this bill should include a declaration of intention that this House is in favor of legislation controlling excess profits. I believe everybody will agree this is germane, Mr. Chairman, because it is embraced within the language of the declaration of policy of the original Spence bill and of this committee amendment. It is consistent with everybody's expression in favor of profits being controlled. And this House had better declare such an intention without delay. During the past several days in the other body the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has let it be known that there will be no legislation this session to tax excess profits, to take the profit out of war. It would be an outrage on the working people of America to control wages but not control profits. If the Members think they are going to get a chance to vote this year for control of profits they are badly mistaken. There will be an appropriation of nearly $20,000,000,000 over and above the regular appropriation for the Armed Forces before the year is out. It will be at the end of the next session of Congress, if at all, that an excess-profits bill may pass, so there will be at least a year or more before there is any excess-profits tax, and billions of dollars of war profits will be made by profiteers. There should be no wage control without profit control—price control is another matter. I am for price control at once; you can black-market with prices but not with wages. Since this is not a tax bill I cannot write in an excess-profits tax, but the least this House can do is pass my amendment, which I submit, Mr. Chairman, is entirely germane, and declare the intent of the House as in favor of control of excess profits at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

This amendment is offered to the declaration of policy. The declaration of policy has in it a statement that it is the purpose to control excess profits or profits out of war. The Chair thinks this amendment is in order and, accordingly, overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read in full.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FLOOD) there were—ayes 80, noes 121.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. FLOOD and Mr. SPENCE.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] voted for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any member of the committee who is opposed to the amendment? If so, will he kindly take his place as a teller?

Mr. WOLCOTT took his place as a teller.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 87, noes 148.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOLLINGER to the committee amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 10, line 3, strike out all of line 3.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Chairman, is it possible, since the amendment does not indicate what it is about, to explain that this is the rent control amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. All time for debate has expired.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of California to the committee amendment: Page 9, line 18, after the word "milk", add "or poultry", and change the word "is" to "their."

Page 9, line 21, after the word "milk", add "and poultry."

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would put the poultry producers on the same basis as the milk producers with respect to increases in the cost of feed and other economic conditions. The poultry producers of the Nation are entitled to price protection the same as other segments of our agricultural industry. I do not see how any Member of this House can deny the fact that the poultry producers of the Nation are justly entitled to this protection.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly urge a favorable vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] to the Spence amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the Spence amendment, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer some committee amendments, which are on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 29, line 6, after the word "military", strike out "and other"; and before the period in line 10 insert "within the framework, so far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 29, line 18, after the word "orders", insert "in preference to other contracts or orders."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 29, line 22, strike out the proviso beginning on line 22 to the period on line 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. At what point in the bill (H. R. 9176) is the Clerk reading?

The CHAIRMAN. Page 30, line 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such property or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within 3 years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which made be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) Any restrictions for real estate credit for home construction shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any restriction otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans for home construction.

(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person," in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 411. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the speculative purchase or speculative sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a speculative position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this act: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall be applicable to bona fide hedging transactions.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this act, and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market,' as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of 3 years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E) For the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term 'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this act, any other agricultural or forest product or by-product.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of this act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean board of trade."

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this act; and

(iv) in administering this act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 502. As used in this act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 503. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 504. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Any regulation or order under this act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

ject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Informatiton obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 506. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this act.

SEC. 507. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title I of this act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 509. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 510. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 511. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

SEC. 512. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 513. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the substitute amendment be dispensed with and that it be open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, technically the United States is not at war. But when you look at the program of mobilization which we have set out for ourselves and the free world it cannot be denied that, for all practical purposes, we are embarking on a wartime program.

We are about to appropriate in the neighborhood of $15,000,000,000 for the purpose not only of arming ourselves but of arming other free nations as well. Our total defense expenditures for this year alone will exceed the total military cost of World War I.

We enter this period of mobilization with a fairly full economy. There is some slack, but not much. If we carry out our $15,000,000,000 mobilization program, we will use up that slack, and the pressures of inflation will begin to be felt in earnest.

Before, during, and after World War II we made some serious errors. Before and during the war we failed to control prices straight across the board, with the result that there were soft spots in the inflationary balloon, and the places where high prices tended to pop out hurt those people with fixed incomes and added to the already substantial pressures of inflation.

After the war we lifted price controls too soon. I am sure that the memory of 1947 and 1948, with the ever-creeping increases in the cost of living, is still fresh enough in all our minds, so that we realize how false were the arguments of those who claimed that the lifting of price controls would mean increased production and lower prices.

I voted consistently for price controls during the war and I voted against ending OPA when it was liquidated in 1946. I think that events have vindicated my position.

Now we are entering a period of total mobilization—a period that probably will not end next year or the year after. We know that we are in for a long, hard pull. Whether or not we are able to avoid a global war, our defense efforts will be gigantic over a period of years.

For even if we are able to put out the fire that has started in Korea, and even if we are able to prevent the outbreak of other fires in the world, we will still be faced with the greatest issue of our time—that of winning over to our side the masses of the Asian world, not with words alone but with a better standard of living. Just as we are prepared to appropriate billions for military preparedness today, we may be called upon to appropriate large sums to try to bring the masses of poverty-stricken people in the world a better way of life. These masses form a sort of political vacuum in the world, and if the vacuum is not filled by the leadership of free nations, then it will most certainly be filled by the totalitarianism of the modern-day Communists.

There have been too many post mortems on dead bodies since June 25 and not enough constructive thought given to curing the diseases of the world of today and the world of the future—that is, the diseases of poverty, misery, and malcontent, which themselves have caused the spread of that global infection called communism.

Probably the most crucial factor in promoting the political and economic health of the world is a healthy American economy, for this is the fountainhead of the fight for freedom.

It is in a constructive spirit that I propose the following program to keep our economy healthy during the coming period of all-out mobilization:

First. An across-the-board price freeze, with a roll-back on prices to the June 25 level—that is, the level at which prices were when the Korean crisis began. This should serve notice to the profiteers that America will stand for no selfishness at a time of crisis. The only excuses for price increases are increases in costs of production—and you cannot tell me that costs have gone up 10 to 13 percent since June 25. It is true that some price increases may have been caused by an initial wave of "scare buying," but that seems to be slacking off now, and prices are still high. That can only mean one thing—someone is raking off the profits, and merely by taking advantage of the immediate situation.

Second. Appropriate steps should be taken to control consumer credit and installment buying, both of which have inflationary tendencies.

Third. The Government should be given flexible authority to curb speculation in the commodity markets. I say "flexible authority" because I believe the Government should employ its great stores of surplus commodities, where practicable, to stabilize the markets.

Fourth. I believe we should impose as soon as possible an effective excess-profits tax as the cornerstone of a tax program which will as nearly as practicable put us on a pay-as-you-go basis. I believe we ought to come closer to "pay as you go" than we did during World War II. It is generally recognized, I believe, that large deficits certainly add to the inflationary pressures by putting a great deal more money into the economy than the Government takes out. In my opinion, there should be little objection to a true "excess" profits tax, because war is not, never has been, and never should be a game of profit. I believe that any soldier in Korea would back me up on that.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will pass an honest, realistic bill—a bill that recognizes that we are in for a long, hard pull.

Mr. Chairman, we are faced with an all-out job. Halfway measures will not suffice.

(Mr. JACKSON of Washington asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with and that it be open for amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I assume the gentleman means by "committee amendment" the amendment which we are now reading as the original bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, there are six committee amendments on the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE as a committee amendment: Page 30, strike out lines 14 and 15 and insert:

"(3) where the President finds that all other means of acquiring or obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not speak on the pending amendment. I rise to make some observations about the fact that this bill will have no ceilings on what newspapers and publications may charge for advertising. We have the very anomalous situation that as the result of the power of the press everything that a newspaper buys is controlled, but everything that a newspaper sells is uncontrolled. Those boys up in the Press Gallery have their wages frozen but the advertising rate that the newspapers may charge is unlimited. All supplies bought by the press are controlled. Ad rates are limitless in price. Now, it is argued two-foldly, first, that it is in the interest of the freedom of the press; second, that OPA in the last war had such decontrol. I cannot see any freedom of the press involved. Nobody seeks to interfere with what newspapers may say or what they may not say. There is no interference with the editorial policy. There is no interference with any publication or nonpublication of news items. There is no question of freedom of the press involved. I am as much as anyone an advocate of free press. Therefore, as I said before, it is rather anomalous to protect the press in what it purchases and not to protect advertisers in what it buys from the press.

Now, just think for one moment what goes into the advertising lineage of a newspaper. Almost everything of the daily diet—everything of daily consumption—there are a thousand and one articles such as breakfast foods, clothing, drugs, medicines, drinks, soap, gasoline, toilet preparations, tires, automobiles. Think of all the ads that the department stores place in newspapers. If the price of those ads can be increased without let or hindrance that means that you and I who buy those products, which are the subject of those advertisements, must pay more therefor, because all the cost of advertising is saddled upon the consumer. And, to that extent you will stop the inflationary spiral. Apparently with newspapers, magazines, and publications the sky may be the limit. You cannot consider publications in a vacuum, unrelated to other commodities. Increased cost of ads increases the price of almost all commodities.

Now, it has been argued that we did not do it the last time; in the original OPA Act there were no controls on anything that the newspapers did with reference to the sale of their products or their services. Well, if we made a mistake once I do not think we should make a mistake a second time.

Everybody should be leveled down to size in an emergency of this character. We cannot worship newspapers as sacred cows. Newspapers are not sacrosanct. A newspaper is just as much a commodity when it comes to ads as a sack of potatoes or a suit of clothes, as far as price is concerned. There should be no exceptions whatsoever. It is ridiculous not to control advertisements in the newspapers. Let all, including publications, make sacrifices in this mighty war effort. None should be excluded.

You say there shall be no control of ads in newspapers, hence in order to equalize the situation you say there shall also be no control of outdoor advertising facilities. I can tell you that if ever there is a monopoly—and I know something about monopolies in this country—it is outdoor advertising. We roll out the carpets, as it were, for the outdoor advertising agencies. We say, "No; the sky is the limit as far as outdoor advertising is concerned, outdoor billboards."

Then we go a step further and we say that theater tickets shall be exempt from control. I ask you, come to New York and try to see a show called South Pacific, or try to see a show called Kiss Me, Kate, or The Happy Family. You will pay through the nose. The Shubert interests, that have a tremendous clutch upon the theaters in New York, have an absolute monopoly. They have ironclad control of these tickets. They get personally for distribution to their friends every night 50 tickets for South Pacific. Multiply 50 by 8 (eight performances a week) and then multiply by 52 weeks and you get over 20,000 tickets given to the Shuberts—given for nothing. What happens to those tickets?

Those tickets go to the speculators of New York. When you Members of Congress try to see that show, you may have to pay as much as $60 per seat—on a Saturday night. You pay that much if you want to go to see it. I had to pay an extravagant amount to see it.

With reference to the show called Kiss Me, Kate, the Shuberts get 40 tickets a night. Multiply that by 8 and 52. Those tickets primarily go to the speculators. There is no ceiling on the prices. Shuberts control 17 out of 29 theaters in New York City. They demand scores of choice seats for each performance. All these seats are routed to the speculators. There will be no ceiling on the price of these seats. It has been estimated that from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 of such seats stem from South Pacific alone each year. They are to be uncontrolled. Most of that money goes south into the pockets of numerous individuals. They pay no admission tax. They pay no income tax. Yet, you play right into the hands of those malefactors by saying there shall be no ceiling on the price of theater tickets. I would say that some fifteen or twenty million dollars of such seats are involved each year covering the Shubert theaters in New York City and what happens in New York City theaters controlled by Shubert interests occurs in other metropolitan areas like Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, and so forth. The evil is national and widespread. In conference I hope the conferees of the House will take a second look to the end that newspaper ads will be controlled and theater tickets will be controlled.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from New York speak on advertising, theater tickets, newspapers, and so forth. I am sure he is a great expert on all of those human activities. But having spent something like 35 years in the newspaper business, and having gone through two world wars while I was in the newspaper business, I am well aware of a fact that the gentleman has overlooked, that whenever there is a scarcity of goods to sell and whenever rationing is in effect, there is very little advertising in the newspapers or over the radio or by any other means.

As a result of that situation, if you are to have free publications in America, the time comes when they sometimes have to adjust their rates in order to keep paying these men for whom such great tears were shed, the reporters and others who work for the press. The amendment which was offered to this bill by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] was simply offered for the purpose of doing that which was recognized as necessary in World War I and World War II to protect the right of the American people to get information. I would like to remind the Members that there have been those who for a long time have been fighting to control the free dissemination of news in America. Congress in its wisdom wrote this provision into the law during the early days of World War II simply to protect the right of the American people to get information without having those who would like to have a controlled economy foisted on us to break down all dissemination of news and to control it through prices and rationing. No one is compelled to buy advertising or to buy newspapers or magazines or billboard advertisements, if they do not want to do so. Competition in the market place fixes that. That is not a necessity of life and if they do not want to buy it, they do not have to, they can still eat.

Of course I do not know too much about theater tickets, except I know there is nobody from my little home town out in Ohio who is paying $60 for tickets to South Pacific. Whenever I reach the place that I cannot afford to buy a ticket to South Pacific, I will not go to see it, and I presume that, if the gentleman from New York is able to pay $60 for tickets to South Pacific, perhaps the people who take him for "suckerbait" can use the money better than he can.

But out in my section of the country we are not foolish enough to pay $60 to see any of your New York shows—we just do not do it. I know who is selling those tickets. I get their advertisements right along.

I am not an authority either on monopolies. The gentleman has investigated monopolies—whether he has ever represented any as an attorney, I do not know. But I do know he has investigated them. But there is no monopoly in the newspaper business, and I do not want to do that which has been suggested by some people who have attempted to destroy a free press by these so-called regulations—I do not want to say that there shall only be one newspaper in a city the size of New York. It just might be, I will say to the gentleman from New York, that, if there is only one newspaper in that city, it might disagree with him and it might end his valuable services to his constituents here in the Congress. So let there be a free press and let there be a free competitive market.

The gentleman from New York for a long while has stood up and fought against monopolies. He said he wanted free enterprise and that he wanted free competition in all lines. Well, let there be competition. If people want to pay whatever the New York Times desires to charge for advertising, let them buy that advertising, and if they do not want it, they do not have to buy it.

But let the New York Times and the other publications in this country continue to print and continue to publish. The same thing goes for radio and for television. The House of Representatives has acted on this question time after time, and we may be thankful that the Congress of the United States has indicated that it still wants a free press.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a nice academic speech by my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], predicated upon the premise that there might be some effort to control a free press, and the free dissemination of news, as he said, but I know of no one who wants to do that.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman I am certain he is not interested in controlling the press, but that there were those in the Government and out of the Government during World War II who wanted to control the press of this Nation, and you and I and others stood against them. I am glad that you did so, and I hope you will continue to do so.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know of no one. The only thing done during World War II was in connection with newsprint and the allocation of it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. About the time that Mr. Henderson and others were talking about having only one store in a city and one newspaper. You know what I mean.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, I do not know what the gentleman means. All I know is that the Buchanan amendment has been adopted. It was offered by a Member of the House who is a Democrat. It was supported by other Members. I do know it was offered, because it was an oversight. It was unnecessary in the committee bill as originally reported out, because the committee did not cover controls, but it only became necessary when substitutes developed. That was quickly taken care of.

I might say I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] in discussing the freedom of the press, in the academic way that he did, that we need a free press, and that it will never be imperiled except by the press itself. There never will be any danger to a free press in America unless it comes from the press itself, when they do things that they should not do, and the American people become aroused and incensed, and I cannot see that that will happen.

I might also say that we stand valiantly for a free press. All Members of the House, particularly on the Democratic side, stand for a free press, even when we have in mind the fact that 84 percent of the press are against us. So we are firmly for a free press, despite the fact that 84 percent of the press supports the Republican Party. It shows how strongly we are imbued with the fundamentals of our Constitution and our way of life and our Government, when we are so strong for the maintainance of a free press, even when 84 percent of the newspapers of the country are against the Democratic Party.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of California. And will the gentleman point out also that in order to help pay for the salaries of the people who work for the press, we subsidize it to the tune of about $160,000,000 a year.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not going to get into that.

May I make this further observation, that while 84 percent of the press is Republican, I know that 84 percent of the employees of those papers are Democrats.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think the gentleman will agree that if the United States Government did not have a press and a radio to help disseminate news during wartimes, to help sell liberty bonds and to explain Government controls and why you ought to go along, and this, that, and the other things; and if the Government was required to pay regular advertising rates, there would not be this deficit which the gentleman mentioned existing, and we could reduce our rates and pay the men more money.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not going to get into deficits. I agree with everything the gentleman has said about a free press. It goes even deeper than what the gentleman says, outside of the deficit. So all of us recognize the importance of a free press, but I recognize the ingenuity of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] in raising a straw man to knock down.

I want the RECORD to show that we are all for a free press and the free dissemination of news, but I wanted to make the further observation, for the benefit of the press, that they should be fair to all persons, and particularly to all political parties and candidates. Most of the 84 percent of the papers which are Republicans are fair in their news columns, but some are not. However, I hope they will profit from the experience that 435 Members of the House are firmly in support of the freedom of the press, and that as the coming campaign approaches they will be as fair to the Democratic Members in their news columns as they are to the Republican Members.

I might also say that the Boston papers are fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I say to the gentleman that I am humbly sorry that I at all disturbed the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no disturbance; this is a pleasure for me.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am sorry; I was not intending to stick a needle into the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is not sticking a needle into me; I am afraid I am sticking one into the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am amazed at the reaction that has been obtained here. Of course, if the gentleman will just take time tomorrow to read the remarks of the gentleman from New York——

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is firm for the principles of a free press.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am really sorry the gentleman has been disturbed or perturbed by what I have said.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do not put into my mind thoughts that I do not express.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I could not put anything into the gentleman's mind.

Mr. McCORMACK. If anyone is disturbed or perturbed it is my friend from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am sure the House will know who is disturbed.

Mr. McCORMACK. In this little friendly exchange——

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I hope the gentleman is going to mark me down as being for a free press.

Mr. McCORMACK. Stronger than the gentleman is; I am not only for a free press, but I am for a fair press.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the House dispose of the six committee amendments that are now at the Clerk's desk after the gentleman from Massachusetts has concluded. The committee amendments were reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the intention of the gentleman from Kentucky with respect to other amendments or with respect to time for full debate? Can the gentleman tell us that?

Mr. SPENCE. It does not affect the other amendments. We merely want to dispose of the committee amendments which were unanimously reported.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, do I assume from the gentleman's request that he is going to offer the committee amendments en bloc?

Mr. SPENCE. We will be glad to have them considered en bloc; yes. I so modify my request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, if it will expedite things I will relinquish my 5 minutes in order that these amendments may be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments:

Page 34, line 16, after the word "materials" and before the period, insert "including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals."

Page 35, strike out lines 1 through 12, inclusive.

Page 40, line 19, strike out beginning with line 19 down through and including line 2, on page 41, and insert:

"(e) Any rules, regulations, or orders for real-estate credit shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans of like classifications authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any rule, regulation, or order otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government-insured or guaranteed loans against private loans."

Page 43, line 22, strike out lines 22 through 25, inclusive, and insert: "Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law."

Page 55, line 4, strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert "June 30, 1951."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 42, line 5, strike out all of paragraph 3, and on page 39, line 3, after the word "any", insert "consumer or real estate."

[Mr. WOLCOTT addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not finding fault with what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] said about the fine qualities of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. We all admire him. At the same time, that is no reason why this amendment should be adopted. You were told during the course of the day, as you were last week, that if you do not strike out these credit provisions of this bill you are going to interfere with the lifeblood of the economy of the country, and I think you all remember how indignantly the gentleman from Michigan rose to his feet last week when somebody said that the lifeblood of the boys fighting in Korea or anywhere else where they may be called upon to fight is just as dear to us as is the lifeblood of the economy of the country.

The gentleman in the White House, like the gentleman from Michigan, was also baptized by the fire of battle in the front lines. I think he is the same gentleman there with the same human qualities as he was when he sat as chairman of the Senate War Investigating Committee, and the same human being, with the same feelings when he was back home at Independence, Mo. We have entrusted without hesitation to our President, as Commander in Chief, the lifeblood of the members of our country's armed services. We can just as safely and just as unhesitatingly entrust to his care, control over the economy of this country.

That is precisely what you do by this bill when you impose price controls and wage controls. You also give the power to the President to requisition business, big and little, by this bill, with the power to allocate materials. There can be no reason why the banking interests of this country should be exempt from such controls. There is nothing so sacrosanct about credit that puts it beyond the power of this Congress to control it either directly or indirectly through the President or the Federal Reserve Board.

There is nothing new, despite what we have been told, about this proposal to give to the President the authority to control credit. If you will look at the Trading With the Enemy Act you will find that in 1917, and by amendment in 1941, we vested in the President the power to control credit. During World War II he never found it necessary to control more than consumer credit. He did, as you remember, control it to an extent with regulation W during World War II, and that was lifted as soon as it was possible to do so.

The provisions you have in this bill now which the amendment seeks to strike are necessary and essential to the over-all control powers that we are seeking to give the President at the present time. You do not have to take my word for it.

Let me quote to you what the Federal Reserve Board itself says on the subject:

> Vigorous measures of restraint on private credit extension constitute the most important instrument immediately available for holding the line against an inflationary price spiral.

And then referring to this very measure we are considering now, this very language which he seeks to eliminate from this bill, the Federal Reserve Board says:

> The authority requested in the proposed Defense Production Act of 1950 would provide the means for applying further restraints and this authority is necessary.

That is what we were told on August 1, 1950. You might just as well have no controls at all, if you are not going to have credit controls. I urge upon you, as we did last week when we voted down a similar amendment, that you vote down this amendment, lest you gut the entire bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. This amendment in this particular form has not been presented before, because it does not include real-estate credit or consumer credit. It goes only to general credit.

Mr. MULTER. This amendment seeks to strike out important credit provisions of this bill. Adoption of the amendment will deny to the President one of the primary things he asked for as necessary immediately.

You will make yourselves ridiculous in the eyes of the country if, after voting to the President stand-by wage and price controls which he says he does not presently need, you now deny him the controls he and the Federal Reserve Board tell you he must have now.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the Committee on Banking and Currency, especially the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN]? I should like an explanation of subsection (1), "Consumer credit," appearing on page 41. If the gentleman will remember, he and I sponsored the amendment that excluded from control rates charged by any common carrier or public utility, rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio or television broadcasting station, and so on, and also rates charged for any professional services, as well as other items.

If the gentleman will refer to page 41, beginning with the words "Consumer credit," the way the language reads it would seem to include any kind of credit that might be extended for services, say, by a doctor or by a lawyer. Does not the language, as you have written it on page 41, subsection (1) "Consumer credit," exclude the items we referred to in our jointly-sponsored amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I might say that consumer credit as defined by the Federal Reserve Board would reinstitute a set-up similar to Regulation W. They very specifically outline certain items that are covered under consumer credit. In reference to rates that are charged by professional people for services rendered, those would not be covered under consumer credit.

Mr. FULTON. The same applies for any other item, then, that was in our amendment of exclusion?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is exactly right.

Mr. FULTON. Such excluded items would definitely not be under the consumer credit control outlined on page 41, subsection (1)?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is correct.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I know it is getting late, but there are several things in this I should like to call to your attention.

In the first place, when this was debated before, the main controversy occurred on the changes that were made in the real-estate credit. A lot of people thought that controls should be left over real-estate credit. The way the gentleman from Michigan has offered this amendment, it leaves real-estate credit exactly the way it is in the Spence bill, so that real-estate credit would not be affected at all. If that has been the determining factor in your previous votes, please keep in mind that this time it merely deals with the general credit provisions of the bill.

In the second place, in my judgment, there is nothing that is more important than this particular provision. The reason why we should hesitate to turn over complete authority over credit is that the credit of the country functions better and produces more if it is left in private hands within certain limits. The President has never used the authority he has to limit credit, and neither has the Federal Reserve Board; in fact, the Federal Reserve Board by supporting the price of Government bonds at a price higher than par has produced part of the inflation which we are now experiencing. There are many present methods of cutting down which have been ignored in the past, as the gentleman from Michigan pointed out in the statement he made earlier in the day.

I think this is such a drastic step I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he says that he doubts if anything would be done under this for some time. Therefore, I think we would do well to adopt this amendment, leaving intact the provisions regarding consumer credit and the provisions regarding real-estate credit, and hold off on this turning over of authority over all credit to the President until we have had time to give it a far better examination. As the gentleman from Michigan has pointed out, the same proposal has been defeated twice in the past.

It is an extremely serious step. I urge, in view of the fact that the main provisions of the bill and the ones that will be used are handed over to the President, even though this amendment is adopted, that you adopt this amendment and reserve action on the general broad credit provision until later. I might say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] that under that broad definition of credit, in my judgment, the President could certainly control the items to which he referred when he was questioning the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. MORTON. Unless this amendment is adopted, if the bill remains as is, unamended, do I understand that short-term commercial credit can be controlled?

Mr. KUNKEL. I understand that definition of credit is so broad that you could even control transactions between two individuals. Furthermore, the Government now has complete power to devalue or depreciate the value of money. So it is more important than ever to hold off on the over-all grant of power with respect to credit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In line with the colloquy that has just taken place, may I refer the committee to the first sentence on line 5, which answers all these questions as to how broad this credit is. It says that credit means any loan, advance, or discount. All the rest of it is in addition to that. Credit means any loan, or any advance, or any discount, and it covers all kinds of credit of whatever nature.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], and I am sympathetic with what the gentleman is trying to do, but why does the gentleman feel that he has to strike out the rest of the paragraph and not just that one line?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because all the rest of the paragraph must apply to credit other than consumer credit or real-estate credit, or it would not be here. You have the definition of consumer credit, and then you have the definition of real-estate credit, and then we have this definition of credit, which, of course, must be all other credit than consumer credit and real-estate credit.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Under the very drastic controls which we had during World War II, was there a similar effort made to control credit generally as is now being made?

Mr. KUNKEL. The only regulation on that which came to my attention is regulation W, which was only in connection with consumer credit.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, what we are trying to do here is to attack this problem at the top level and to attack the problem of control in general at the credit levels, both general credit as well as real-estate and consumer credit.

There is now in excess supply some $10,000,000,000 in purchasing power and the problem is to drain off from the normal flow of demand for goods this excess purchasing power. It is estimated that if Regulation W were reinstated as we had it in World War II, that that alone would take care of some $3,000,000,000. If credits in general and real-estate credit, which are a very important part of this bill, were to be removed, it would tend to weaken the entire purport of this bill at this time.

In answer to the gentleman from New York, I might say that the Second War Powers Act and the Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917 did give these broad credit-control powers to the President at that time.

If we are to attack this problem without the many manifold controls that are necessary at the consumer levels, and focus our attention upon the higher levels, the producer or the distributor levels, you will be able to hold the economy in check to that degree. One who is familiar with the real-estate expansion, with consumer credit expansion, and with credit expansion in general, knows that those are the factors that tend to bring about this inflationary spiral rise. It is in the hope that we will be able to keep these things in control at the top levels, that we will be able to reduce the need for the obnoxious consumer level controls that are being advocated and will be necessary if we fail at the top level.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. If I understand the minds of the Members of the House, a very great majority want legislation that will meet the present situation—limited controls and stand-by controls. The American people do. One of the most inflationary influences is credit.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. If this amendment is adopted, it takes away 50 percent of the power to control inflationary movements at this particular time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will take the lid off completely and create an inflationary spiral that will be impossible to keep under control.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Massachusetts regarding the desires of the people.

My question is this: Apparently such control was imposed during World War I. It was not thought advisable to do so during World War II, when we had a much greater inflationary situation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, yes. That is contained in the broad powers given the President in the Second War Powers Act.

Mr. MULTER. The act of December 18, 1941. We gave the President the same power that we have in this bill to control credits. He delegated it to the Federal Reserve Board, and the very fact that we had the right to sell to banks was sufficient to hold the credit down.

Mr. KEATING. We who are not experts are told one thing by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and a different thing by the other gentleman.

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the book in front of him. He can read it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is there. It is in the original Trading With the Enemy Act, in the Second World War.

It is necessary to defeat this amendment. Otherwise, you will have no control at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 151, noes 124.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to title II. I have an amendment at the desk which is agreeable to the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCHANAN: On page 10, line 5, after the word "rentals" insert: "(a)" and on page 10, line 6, after the word "service" insert: "(b)".

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, this is to clarify a previous amendment that has been approved, but does not exclude newsprint as one of the items. There was some question of interpretation. This is satisfactory to both sides.

Title 2 of H. R. 9176 contains, in sections 207 and 208, elaborate provisions for the review of price or wage stabilization orders. The provisions are apparently intended to apply to both types of orders, although they are appropriate only for price orders.

The appeal or review provisions are derived from those which were used for price orders in World War II. They may be summarized as follows:

Any person objecting to any regulation or order may file a protest with the President. This protest must be filed within 6 months, but if new grounds for the protest arise, as would normally be the case in a wage order, the protest may be filed within 6 months after the new grounds arise. A protesting party is entitled to a hearing before a board of review, if he so requests. The hearing is to be a full-fledged one, with witnesses subpenaed, and so forth. If the protest is ultimately denied the protestant may appeal to the Emergency Court of Appeals. Full-fledged judicial review before that Court is provided. Finally, decisions of the Emergency Court of Appeals are subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, on writ of certiorari.

These provisions are wholly inappropriate insofar as the wage stabilization orders are concerned, for the following reasons:

First, the War Labor Board, or whatever other agency is created to settle labor disputes, must have power to make prompt and final settlement of disputes if good labor relations are to be maintained.

Second, if a settlement of a wage labor dispute is not to become finally effective for 2 or 3 years, as would be the case under the review and appeal provisions of H. R. 9176, strife and unrest in the plant will be continued throughout that period.

Third, experience during World War II indicated that industrial unrest could be prevented only if the Government agency had power immediately to effectuate a final settlement.

Fourth, the considerations underlying a wage stabilization order will be of a general economic or sociological character. Judicial review of such orders would not in any event be useful or appropriate. In contrast, price orders frequently rest on a series of complex findings raising legal issues appropriate for judicial review.

Fifth. The decisions of the War Labor Board were not reviewable. The Smith-Connolly Act, which ultimately gave statutory authority for the Board, empowered the Board "to decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board." It contained no provision for review of the Board decisions. The World War II experience was, in general, satisfactory, and it should not be departed from in the absence of some clear reason for doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call on the motion to recommit H. R. 5976 today, I understand I am recorded in the affirmative when I should have been recorded in the negative. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT OF 1949

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 3959) to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and for other purposes, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this agreeable to the Republican members of the committee?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman consulted with them?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes, I have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DAWSON, BOLLING, HOLIFIELD, HARVEY, and LOVRE.

CONFERRING JURISDICTION ON THE COURTS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK WITH RESPECT TO CIVIL ACTIONS BETWEEN INDIANS OR TO WHICH INDIANS ARE PARTIES

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 747, Rept. No. 2844), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 192) to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which the Indians are parties. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

SETTLEMENT OF INTERCUSTODIAL CONFLICTS INVOLVING ENEMY PROPERTY

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 748, Rept. No. 2845), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 516) authorizing the President, or such officer or agency as he may designate, to conclude and give effect to agreements for the settlement of intercustodial conflicts involving enemy property. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on tomorrow at 10 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERIODIC CENSUS OF GOVERNMENTS

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7265) to provide for the conduct of a periodic census of governments, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the bill we have been working on this afternoon be the first order of business tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee, Mr. MILLER of California, and Mr. REES.

RECLAMATION PROJECT ACT OF 1939

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1922) to amend section 10 of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 11, after "project", insert ": Provided, That, if a water users' organization is under contract obligation for repayment on account of the project or division involved, easements or rights-of-way for periods in excess of 25 years shall be granted only upon prior written approval of the governing board of such organization."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES AND OTHER INDIANS OF EASTERN OKLAHOMA

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9219) to promote the rehabilitation of the Five Civilized Tribes and other Indians of eastern Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. MORRIS. I shall be glad to. This type of bill is usually referred to as a rehabilitation bill. It provides for the setting up of a revolving fund of $10,000,000 for the Five Civilized Tribes and other Indians in the State of Oklahoma. It is not a grant; it is merely a loan, except that 20 percent of it is nonreimbursable; 80 percent is a loan to rehabilitate these Indians and to help them become self-sustaining citizens in their economic life. This follows the pattern that has been set by this House in recent days. We passed two like bills for the State of Montana, introduced by our colleague, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART], and two for our late and lamented colleague, the gentleman from North Dakota, Mr. Lemke. This bill follows the pattern.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. MORRIS. It is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, how much money is involved?

Mr. MORRIS. There is an involvement of $10,000,000, but, as I say, it is a loan and not a grant, except 20 percent that is nonreimbursable.

Mr. TABER. I think this ought to come up under the regular rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, and I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. MORRIS. Would the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I will say this to the gentleman, that time is of the essence here. As I suggested just a moment or two ago, we have passed four bills like this, I will say to the gentleman from New York: Two for the State of Montana of which the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART] was the author, and two for our late and lamented colleague, the gentleman from North Dakota, Mr. Lemke. This bill follows the pattern that we have set. These are loans for these Indians. The money is badly needed. These people are in dire circumstances; at least, some of them.

Mr. TABER. How many Indians?

Mr. MORRIS. Sixty-four thousand in all. There are 14,200 families altogether, approximately.

Mr. TABER. How many of them are wealthy?

Mr. MORRIS. I will ask the author of the bill, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STIGLER], to explain that in detail.

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, these Indians may be divided into 4 groups. The breakdown is as follows: In group 1 there are 7 percent, who enjoy the highest standard of living. In group 2 there are 44 percent. They are in the middle class. They have comfortable homes. In group 3 there are 27 percent. They have low incomes and very, very bad housing, with difficult living conditions, but they are not on relief. Then in group 4 there are 22 percent, who have the lowest standard of living and very bad housing. They are all on relief.

Mr. TABER. I think I must object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MORRIS. I do not want to be too persistent on it, but I should like our general chairman to make a statement, if it is satisfactory to the gentleman from New York to reserve his objection for just a little while longer. Then I should like to make this final statement.

I realize how interested the gentleman is in economy. I appreciate his position. However, I honestly and sincerely believe that this will be as good an economic move as we could possibly made in this field. This is not a grant; it is a loan. It will keep them from coming back to our Government and asking for grants. It will rehabilitate them. It will give them a chance to furnish a living for themselves, and in the long run it will be a good, economic endeavor, in my judgment.

Mr. TABER. The trouble is, you are spending so everlastingly much money now. The Bureau of Indian Affairs is costing an enormous sum of money and we are not getting any results out of it. All this would be done under the direction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and under the direction of Dillon Myer, a notorious character. It just does not make sense to me. I must object.

Mr. NICHOLSON. If the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment, may I ask him if this proposition is likely to save some money, would it be possible not to put it in the Department of the Interior for that Department to supervise?

Mr. TABER. I assume it goes into the Department of the Interior. That is the only place there is that handles Indian affairs in this country.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Would the gentleman from New York reserve his objection so that the gentleman from Oklahoma might explain?

Mr. TABER. I think the bill ought to come up in the regular way, under the regular rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman continues to object.

WADE H. NOLAND

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2854) for the relief of Wade H. Noland, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the situation?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I cleared this with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. There are three bills. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the distinguished minority leader, was sitting near him and I thought at the time that he spoke to him about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I was not aware of it.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I cleared it with the gentleman from Michigan and he approved this action on the three bills. I trust that is satisfactory.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachustts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRESTON L. WATSON

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1056) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Preston L. Watson as administrator of the goods and chattels, rights, and credits which were of Robert A. Watson, deceased, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BYRNE of New York, LANE, and JENNINGS.

EWA PLANTATION CO.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2233) for the relief of Ewa Plantation Co., a Hawaiian corporation, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BYRNE of New York, DENTON, and JENNINGS.

(Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point and include a resolution.)

DR. PAUL J. RAVER, BONNEVILLE ADMINISTRATOR, AN EFFICIENT AND DEPENDABLE PUBLIC SERVANT

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Paul J. Raver for many years has been Administrator of the Bonneville Administration and the Administration has its offices in my congressional district in Portland, Oreg. During my service in the Congress I have had occasion to observe the work of Dr. Raver and have found him at all times to be most cooperative and devoted to the heavy responsibilities resting upon him. He has done an outstading and noteworthy job in developing and administering the great public-power resources of the Pacific Northwest. He enjoys the confidence and esteem of the citizens of the Northwest and he has received many commendations for the outstanding job he is doing.

Based upon my long experience with the Bonneville Administration, in my opinion the recent criticism of Dr. Raver which appeared in the August Reader's Digest was wholly unjustified.

As a part of my remarks I include a resolution recently adopted by the Yamhill County Pomona Grange expressing the commendation of that organization for Dr. Raver's activities in which they say:

Resolved, That we express our commendation of Dr. Raver for his restraint in this attempt at character assassination, and reaffirm our faith and confidence in his proven integrity and the constructive leadership he has given to the great Federal power development of the Columbia River.

The following is the resolution in full:

We, the members of the Yamhill County Pomona Grange, wish to commend the Portland Oregonian for its alertness and aggressiveness in the public interest through exposing the editorial dishonesty and deliberate distortion of facts by the August Reader's Digest in an article entitled "What Does CVA Mean to You?", by Leslie A. Miller.

The article calls Dr. Paul J. Raver, Bonneville Administrator, a socialist, and links him with two other "old-time socialists," Stephen Raushenbush and Dr. Carl D. Thompson. These three, the article says, were "neatly placed in strategic spots for promoting their socialistic dreams."

The Oregonian not only secured an admission from Mr. Miller, the alleged author, that the socialist accusations were not written by him, but also an admission by Alfred S. Dashell, managing editor of the magazine, that the phrase calling Dr. Raver a "socialist" was inserted after Miller's article was accepted.

Furthermore, The Oregonian implied in an editorial July 25, that the Digest article may be a part of a national campaign by private utilities to discredit valley authorities and all public utilities with the label of socialism. Cited by The Oregonian was a booklet issued in January by the Electric Companies Advertising Program, which says, in part, "From the preceding charts it is apparent that to link our fight to the TVA question would run us into a lot of opposition, most of it of the big lie at home and abroad. The most brazen demonstration of that principle is now being provided for all the world to hear and see at Lake Success, where Jakob A. Malik, the Soviet representative, is misusing his office as President of the Security Council to foist upon the world a total and unabashed perversion of the facts to aid Communist aggression in Korea. His and his government's lies have been exposed many times both within the Security Council and through the notes and the White Book of the American Government. But it is still useful and pertinent to summarize both the Soviet lies and the answers to them, lest the magnitude of the former continue to confuse men's minds.

1. The Soviets assert, and Malik constantly reiterates, that the Korean war was started not by the Soviet puppets in the north, but by the South Korean Government, on the ground that the latter attacked first. This lie, which is unable to mention either a time or a place of the asserted South Korean attack, is contradicted not only by the whole course of the war, which demonstrates that the North Koreans are engaged in a long-planned and well-prepared invasion of a wholly unprepared South Korea, but also by the testimony of the United Nations Commission on Korea. This testimony is that up to the very day of the attack the South Korean Army was organized and deployed solely for defense, that it had neither the arms nor the equipment to undertake an invasion, being merely a constabulary force, and that it was the North Koreans who attacked by land, air, and sea with Soviet tanks, guns, and planes and in some cases from salients already established on South Korean territory.

2. The Soviets assert, and Malik reiterates, that the alleged South Korean attack was organized, prepared, and instigated by the ruling circles of the United States, in particular Defense Secretary Johnson, John Foster Dulles, and General MacArthur. Since there was no South Korean attack, the ruling circles of the United States cannot have instigated it, and were in fact wholly unprepared for hostilities in Korea, as the war shows.

3. The Soviets assert, and Malik reiterates, that the United States is guilty of aggression in Korea because its armed forces have "invaded" another state and Malik in particular cites a definition of aggression adopted by a League of Nations Committee in 1933 to prove his point. The answer is, of course that the American forces are not alone in Korea, but are part of a United Nations force attempting to suppress armed aggression under a mandate from the Security Council supported by all but a few of the United Nations members. In contrast, the Soviets are not only defying the United Nations by continuing to give aid and comfort to an enemy fighting the United Nations, but are themselves guilty of aggression under the very definition Malik cited, since they have supported armed bands invading the territory of another state.

4. The Soviets assert, and Malik reiterates, that the Security Council's enforcement action in Korea is illegal because it was decided upon in the absence of Soviet Russia and Communist China. This lie is refuted not only by the long list of precedents cited in the American White Book and approved by the Soviets themselves, but also by the very fact that Malik has undertaken to preside over a Council session in which Communist China is still absent. Unless the Soviets are willing to convict themselves of an "illegal" course they must acknowledge the legality of any action taken by a Council constituted as at present.

5. The Soviets assert, and Malik reiterates, that the United Nations in general, and the Security Council in particular, are under the dictation of the United States as tools and vessels of the State Department. The answer to that lie has been given by the independent action of all the states concerned, and most emphatically by Dr. Quevedo of Ecuador, who said that it is the Soviets who mistake the Security Council for one of their Arctic slave gangs.

6. Both the Soviets and Malik constantly harp on the theme of American or Anglo-American "imperialism," which is supposed to be trying to subjugate other nations and to extend the Korean war. This lie is refuted not only by the efforts of the United States and other nations to localize the Korean war but also by the whole record of the United States and the whole Western World which brought freedom and independence to the Philippines, India, Burma, Indonesia, and which are now trying to extend the same privileges to other nations, including Korea. If that be imperialism, then let the Soviets follow it and liberate the countries they now hold in bondage.

7. The Soviets assert, and Malik reiterates, that the war in Korea is a civil war in which neither Korean side can be an aggressor. That contention is refuted by the fact that the Soviets not only refused to acknowledge the only legal Government in Korea constituted under United Nations auspices but also set up their own puppet regime in a North Korean state, which is now waging aggressive war on the South Korean state and Government.

8. The Soviets assert that in bombing military installations and munitions factories used by the North Korean aggressors the American forces are resorting to barbaric methods of warfare because civilians are also killed thereby. The United Nations Commission has testified that the North Koreans were the first to resort to air warfare. The crime is represented by their aggressive war, not by the weapons used to suppress it.

9. The Soviets assert, and Malik reiterates, that the Soviets seek peace while the United States seeks war. But the peace the Soviets seek is the peace of the conqueror, which was also the aim of Hitler, who found the whole world, including Russia, in opposition to that aim. In contrast, the peace the United States aims at is peace in conformity with the principles of the United Nations, which call for the defeat of aggression.

10. Finally, the whole policy of the Soviet delegate at Lake Success is based on fraud and deceit. For while he dons the sheep's clothes of a member of the United Nations dedicated to peace, he is doing everything that an enemy of the United Nations could do to defy its will, its principles, and its aims. And that dual role which Malik plays is the biggest lie of all of them.

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT OF REFEREES IN BANKRUPTCY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3921) for the temporary appointment of referees in bankruptcy, and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That subdivision c of section 43 of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"c. Whenever the office of a referee is vacant or its occupant is temporarily absent or disqualified to act, or whenever the expeditious transaction of the business of the court or courts of mankruptcy may require, the judge, or any one of the judges, may act; or the judge or the chief judge of the district may designate and assign temporarily any referee of the district to act; or the chief judge of the circuit may designate and assign temporarily one or more referees within the circuit to act upon presentation of a certificate of necessity by the judge or chief judge of the district wherein the need arises, or the chief judge of the circuit may order that pending cases be rereferred and future cases referred to one or more referees within the circuit; or the Chief Justice of the United States may designate and assign temporarily a referee from another circuit to act upon presentation of a certificate of necessity by the chief judge of the circuit wherein the need arises. No designation and assignment shall be made without the consent of the chief judge or judicial council of the circuit from which a referee is to be designated and assigned. All designations and assignments of referees shall be filed with the clerks and entered on the minutes of the courts from and to which made. The Chief Justice of the United States or a chief judge of a circuit or a judge or chief judge of a district may make new designations and assignments in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, and may revoke those previously made by him."

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the temporary assignment of referees in bankruptcy, and for other purposes."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to add a new section to section 43 of the Bankruptcy Act. Section 43 as it now exists consists of three subsections—(a), (b), and (c). This bill, as it passed the Senate, would not change any of those three subsections, but would add a new subsection, to be lettered (d).

As amended and passed by the House of Representatives, the bill would not add a new subsection to the act, but would amend and change subsection (c).

It is my opinion that a conference on this measure is in order.

Therefore, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. KEFAUVER, and Mr. DONNELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

MRS. GLADYS J. SENYOHL McCARTHY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2234) for the relief of Mrs. Gladys J. Senyohl McCarthy, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on July 26, 1950, the Senate passed House bill 2234 with amendments. It is a private claim bill. The Senate amendments substantially reduce the amount of the award.

The House has disagreed to the Senate amendments, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed conferees on the part of the House.

I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. EASTLAND, and Mr. WILEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the appointment of those conferees has been carefully considered by the Presiding Officer or whether they are the appointees of the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Nebraska that, under the rule, the Chair can appoint any Senators he wishes to appoint; but the Chair has followed the suggestion of the senior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 3936, which the Committee on Banking and Currency has reported with a complete substitute for the original text of the bill. The substitute will be regarded as the text of the bill, for purposes of amendment; and amendments desired to be proposed by the committee, if any, will be given priority consideration.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to state that I am very glad the Chair has explained the parliamentary situation regarding the bill, because there are several amendments which I submitted on yesterday or the day before, about which I had talked to as many of the committee members as I could. Those to whom I talked authorized me to submit the amendments. Unfortunately I was unable to talk to some of the committee members, and I wish to state that no member of the committee is bound by the amendments; but I trust that the Chair will rule that they are committee amendments, even though they were submitted after the committee reported the bill.

Mr. President, Americans are fighting and dying in Korea today. We must give them the backing they need to carry out the job. Prompt and vigorous action by the country is necessary.

On June 25, the Communist forces of northern Korea invaded the Republic of Korea in an act of deliberate, unprovoked aggression. The forces of the United States, in cooperation with the United Nations, moved promptly to the defense of the Republic of Korea, and since then have been waging a gallant battle.

On July 19, the President transmitted to the Congress a message recommending for our consideration legislation to enable him to meet the situation effectively. On July 19, as chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, I introduced the original Senate bill 3936. I stated at the time that the bill had been introduced by request, and that hearings would be held.

The following week, on Monday morning the committee commenced public hearings, and all witnesses who requested to be heard were given an opportunity to testify. The witnesses were representative of all groups who desired to be heard; and, in addition, we filed statements for certain witnesses who did not desire to appear in person.

We completed these public hearings, and then your committee met in executive session for more than a week, holding morning and late afternoon meetings. Many amendments and changes were offered by members of your committee, as well as by other Members of the Senate. All were very thoroughly discussed and carefully considered, and many changes were made as a result of the various proposals. This was not surprising, in view of the nature of the problems confronting the country and the nature of the remedies necessary to solve these complex problems.

The committee, after amending and changing the original bill, determined that there also should be added additional titles which would authorize permissive controls which the President could use if the home-front situation became worse. These additional controls and permissive powers were not requested by the administration but the committee believed that in view of the speculation, hoarding, and purchases of national-defense materials by individuals and companies, it would be best to give the President these powers to use unless the situation remedies itself. The authority for additional controls is contained principally in titles IV and V.

Under date of August 1, the President sent a special letter to me, as chairman of the committee. The substance of the letter was a statement of the urgency of immediate action on the original bill. The letter further stated that if it was the desire of the committee to recommend additional legislation, he, of course, would accept the legislation, provided it was flexible enough to permit its exercise only when the situation demanded.

After the committee had considered the letter, and believing the situation to be such that additional legislation should be included in this bill, the committee added provision of authority for additional controls.

It was a privilege for me, as chairman of the committee, to have the support of the entire committee in expediting the handling of the proposed legislation which is now before the Senate. I am appreciative of the cooperation on both sides of the aisle and wish to commend the ranking Republican member present, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and the other members for their cooperation with the Democrats in reporting the bill, even though some of the members differed materially on some of the titles. Nevertheless, we worked together to get a bill to the Senate floor; and I feel certain that we shall work together to get the bill passed as quickly as possible in whatever form, of course, the Senate finally decides upon.

Time is of the essence, as the President has stated, and as the American people know. It is unnecessary for me to go into the lengthy testimony given the committee by all the witnesses. The Senate has before it the hearings and the report.

Let me say in connection with the report that the staff of the committee finished the report at 2 o'clock this morning. I understand this is the first report the Senate has ever received in which direct references are made in the body of the report to the corresponding titles and pages of the bill, thus making it easy for Senators to read the report and to study the bill in connection therewith. I wish to express my appreciation to the staff for the work they have done in that connection. Not only did they work until 2 o'clock this morning, but they worked until midnight on Sunday and until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning almost every night for the last 2 weeks.

The report on the production-control bill will, I believe, be of material assistance in helping Senators and the public to understand many of the complicated provisions of this bill. The committee made numerous suggestions to the staff in connection with preparation of the report, and it contains much legislative history.

Mr. President, I also wish to pay my respects to the legislative counsel who for 3 weeks have worked tirelessly and endlessly on this bill.

In order that Senators may be able to study this very complicated piece of proposed legislation with the maximum of ease, they will find throughout the report for each title under discussion a page reference to the bill.

They will also find on page 8 a short but comprehensive summary of the whole pill.

Our productive capacity is incredibly vast, Mr. President, our total output of goods and services is at the rate of almost $270,000,000,000 a year; our overall capacity to produce has increased by 40 percent since 1940. This huge economic machine was running at top speed in June, and even then demand was outrunning supply.

Now, we must immediately divert at least $16,000,000,000 of this production to military purposes, and we must be in a position to divert even more if the military situation becomes worse. Mr. President, we all hope it will not become worse, but we believe that power should be given to the President to make the diversion if there should be such an eventuality.

There is no question in the mind of any Member of this body that we will give the military whatever is needed, regardless of the sacrifices we must make. Time after time members of the committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, said they would give the military whatever may be needed, regardless of sacrifices we might be required to make. But we must not forget two things:

First, our military strength does not consist solely of our soldiers, sailors, and air-force men, of their guns and ships and planes. Our real strength is in our productive economy and our way of life. These are the things which produce the men in the armed services, and the munitions of war they use, and the vast transportation and supply system which takes the men and the munitions where they are needed. In directing materials to military purposes we must be sure not to defeat our purpose by depriving our factories, utilities, and transportation systems of materials they need in order to produce munitions.

Second, our free economy and our democratic way of life are also necessary to our national defense, as much as our military forces and our productive facilities. In putting ourselves in a position to resist aggression, we must not so weaken our economy and injure our way of life that, even in the midst of military victory, we would lose that which we are seeking to defend.

Keeping these things in mind, your committee considered the various proposals put before it. From the first, it appeared clear that substantial authority over materials and over credit was essential. Your committee, therefore, reviewed these controls carefully and approved them—priority, allocation, and requisitioning authority over materials and facilities; financial assistance to increase the supply of materials and facilities; and authority to control consumer and real-estate construction credit. These are now contained in titles I, II, III, and VI of the bill. Generally these powers are the same as those given to the Government in World War II.

While the control over real-estate construction credit was not vested in the Government during World War II, the complete control over construction exercised then made such controls unnecessary. I refer to the War Production Board and to the OPA regulations regarding critical materials. The provision in the pending bill may reduce the need of immediate and burdensome restrictions on building. In other words, we put that matter under the Federal Reserve Board, hoping that with that restriction it would be unnecessary to return to War Production Board and OPA orders.

The principal change which arose in the course of the committee's review of the bill was the proposal to authorize controls over prices and wages.

Much testimony was presented to your committee about increasing prices, and the danger that wages and prices might start to spiral upward. Many indications were received that severe hardships were being imposed on consumers and industry. There is danger that these hardships may increase as the result of increased military demands. Inflation would result in great harm to our economy. It would also, in our judgment, impair the national defense.

Your committee considered the various proposals made to it for price and wage controls in the light of these points, and, after the most thorough consideration, reached general agreement on the measures reported. I say general agreement. Certain members of the committee had other ideas about some titles or sections.

Under these measures, the first reliance is placed on the voluntary self-restraint and discipline of consumers, industry, and agriculture. Mr. President, I wish to impress upon the Senate the fact that the first thing we did was to suggest the voluntary self-restraint program, which is contained in title I. Patriotic Americans can do much, on an individual basis, to prevent hoarding and unwarranted price increases.

Selective price and wage controls are also authorized. Where prices of individual materials can be controlled, without undue effect upon other materials, less interference with ordinary business practices will result.

General price controls are also authorized, to be used if the President deems this necessary. Price control on retail sales and rationing are authorized, either on a selective or a general basis.

Your committee recognized that prices and wages must be tied together; that price increases must not be allowed to such an extent as to make necessary wage increases; and that wage increases must not be allowed to jeopardize price stabilization.

The bill provides that wages must be stabilized in an industry where prices have been placed under ceilings, if the wage increases would cause increases in the price ceilings or would place an undue burden on the producers.

The bill also provides that wages must be stabilized generally when price controls have been imposed on a substantial part of the economy.

However, because of your committee's desire to interfere as little as possible with the functioning of our economy, the bill does not require the President to freeze any prices or wages at once, or at any specified time. Our economy is so intricate and complex that the Congress cannot draw blueprints and make inflexible plans to cover all future situations.

The powers granted in this bill are great. Their very flexibility, so necessary to accomplish our purposes without harm, raises the possibility of abuse. Your committee considered the possibility of limiting the powers or imposing arbitrary restrictions on the President. Your committee did not adopt this negative view. Instead, reliance was placed upon requirements of consultation with industry and other persons affected by regulations and on the watchdog committee set up in the bill. These positive measures to protect the public interest will be more valuable, in our judgment, than any negative measures we could have provided.

This is a solemn moment in our Nation's history. We must choose the right course. If we sit idly by and do not take vigorous action now, the Nation may be in trouble. If we set up what could lead, if unchecked, to an uncontrolled dictatorship, the Nation, as we know it, may also be in trouble.

We must and we will steer between these two dangers. However hard the task, we must, and with God's help we will, carry on our Nation's heritage of freedom and democracy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina whether he feels that the all-out controls and powers which are granted are necessary at this time. I ask the question in all sincerity. We have been told by the President that the only thing confronting us is a police action in Korea.

I should like to ask the Senator further, in connection with my first question, whether evidence has been taken which enables him to speak authoritatively as to what the situation is. Is there merely a police action in Korea at the present time, or is it a fact that we have an all-out war confronting the American people? It seems to me that if we get the right approach, there will be no difficulty in passing legislation that may be needed at this time. But I think it will be very difficult for the people of this country to accept the delegation of powers requested in this bill, if all that is involved is an incident in Korea. I should like to have the Senator's views on those matters.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is asking several questions at once.

Mr. WHERRY. They are all related, though the principal question is difficult.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is a difficult question. Since the Senator from Nebraska is, with me, a member of the Appropriations Committee, he has heard General Bradley, Secretary Symington, Admiral Forrest Sherman, and other members of the military. If I thought that only an incident was involved at the present time in Korea, I should not be before the Senate with this bill. But I am fearful something else may happen. I am hoping and praying to God—and I say it with all reverence—that something worse will not happen. But I do not want to see the Committee on Banking and Currency make a mistake by merely presuming that nothing worse will happen. These are permissive controls. The President may only put them into effect after certain consultations, and then, in many instances, only after other means have been exhausted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Am I to understand from the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that it is his personal view that the situation is so acute that it is absolutely necessary that these standby controls be authorized by the Congress?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator, in using the word "acute," though it is a small word, it has a very comprehensive meaning. I feel that the situation is such that, in its wisdom, the Senate would be wise to entrust these powers to the President of the United States, who is also Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces and who is the only one to whom the powers can be delegated, so that, in event the situation became worse, he might use them.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I have been unable to read the hearings overnight, but is there any evidence at all in the hearings which indicates that in the opinion of the witnesses the situation is about as the distinguished Senator himself views it?

Mr. MAYBANK. I would not say it is in the hearings, but we did hold executive sessions to hear General Bradley, Mr. Symington, and others. I do not want to be an alarmist. I hope the Korean incident will soon end. It was the judgment of the majority of the committee, after the hearings, that some type of permissive controls should be put into effect. We heard from witnesses representing business, commerce, farms, veterans, and Government. Secretary Sawyer, Mr. Symington, and General Bradley were among those representing Government. The hearings will show that there has been quite a price increase caused by the war scare. Rubber went up 23 cents a pound. The Government has to have raw rubber for use in the construction of tanks and planes. The hearings will show that there has been a sharp rise in the cost of living, since the Korean invasion, which has already had a serious effect on our economy.

Mr. WHERRY. I know what the Senator refers to, and I appreciate the viewpoint of the military on the question. I am asking this question in all sincerity. Would it not be easier to go ahead and pass a control bill, if we had the proper approach? If the Korean difficulty is only an incident, as the distinguished Senator referred to it a moment ago——

Mr. MAYBANK. The last time General Bradley appeared before the Appropriations Committee he used the words "national defense" and "emergency." The members of the committee desired to cooperate as fully as was possible with the United Nations. So there were words used here and there which tied in with the United Nations. The Senator knows the details, and I do not think it is proper to discuss them at any length on the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want in any way to bring up any points that should not be discussed.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am only trying to get the bill passed. The President wrote a letter with reference to stand-by controls, and after hearing the witnesses the majority of the committee thought this was the wise thing to do.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator feel that if the Korean war is only a police action or an incident, which will level off, it will be necessary to put these controls into effect?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not want the American mothers and fathers of the boys who are being killed in Korea to feel that we believe this is merely an incident. We know it is really a war.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the very point I wanted to raise.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not hesitate to express my opinion. I am speaking only for myself.

Mr. WHERRY. It seems to me that the questions which I have asked are pertinent. It makes all the difference in the world as to the controls which should be granted and those which should not be granted. If the time is here, and if the military asks for necessary appropriations and controls, that is one thing; but if it is anticipated that there will be a leveling off in the Korean situation, it is an entirely different thing.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Nebraska and I were among the few Members of the Senate who supported the 70-group Air Force. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and I were among the few who voted to increase the Navy. My view is that if the Korean situation is only temporary, the United States should properly prepare itself for all time so that such an incident shall not again occur. If we had spent in 1946 a few billion dollars, we would not be called upon now to appropriate $16,000,000,000 or perhaps $30,000,000,000 in order to regain our prestige in the world.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want to belabor the point any further at this time. I wanted to get the reaction of the distinguished chairman of the committee, who has heard all the testimony, as to the absolute need of controls and how far, in his judgment, Congress should go. I feel that the observation made a moment ago was constructive, namely, that the approach to this subject depends entirely upon what confronts the people of the United States of America.

Mr. MAYBANK. In the future.

Mr. WHERRY. In the future. I certainly feel that we are now in a state of confusion. I do not want to be anything but constructive in this matter, but we are told, as the Senator well knows, that we have got to prepare for the amounts which will be requested when the additional appropriation bills finally reach us, and that they will stagger the American people.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. On the other hand, we are asked to view this Korean situation as a police action. If that be true, I feel that the American people will not be prepared to go as far as they would otherwise be obliged to go and, no doubt, would go, if the situation were presented to them in the way in which I have presented it in questioning the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. In my own humble opinion, as chairman of the committee, I think it was called a police action for certain understandable reasons. I do not think the mothers and fathers of the boys think it is a police action. I have voted for the necessary appropriations and so has the Senator from Nebraska. I am not going to discuss that phase of the question; but I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] was present most of the time and did a wonderful job. When he was absent the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] was the one who suggested the watchdog committee. I was the only one who voted against it, because I did not feel that I should be voting to appoint the committee myself. But we have in it a committee which I think will be able to stop any excess in connection with regulations or rules such as many of us would have liked to have done in the OPA days.

I invite the Senator's attention to that committee. I know the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] will speak concerning it.

Mr. WHERRY. Possibly I can bring forcefully to the attention of the Senate one matter which provoked the questions I asked of the Senator this afternoon. One of the amendments which the distinguished Senator has offered as a separate amendment to title B of the bill provides as follows:

> (h) No ceilings shall be established or maintained on products resulting from the processing of cattle and calves, lambs and sheep, and hogs, the processing of each species being separately considered, which do not allow for a reasonable margin of profit to the processing industry as a group on each such species.

Mr. MAYBANK. On page 32 of the report it will be seen that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] and I brought that up, and we wrote a section which would cover not only the situation referred to in the amendment which the Senator has just read, but other situations. In World War II—I do not remember whether it was in 1941 or 1942—when the distinguished Vice President was a Senator, he and my good friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], with whom I served on the committee, and Representative BATES, offered an amendment in the form of a bill to take care of such situations. It should have been offered as an amendment to the bill which was passed, but it was not, and when it was put into effect it was rather late, because of the gray and black markets on beef, as the Senator from Nebraska remembers. That is why I have offered this amendment as a committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. This is the time of year when feeders are buying lambs.

Mr. MAYBANK. To put into feed lots.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. As always, when we apply controls, there is apprehension as to what the prices are going to be.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me say to the Senator that we are not imposing controls; we are only providing permissive controls to be used if the situation becomes worse.

Mr. WHERRY. If the situation is such that only controls which are absolutely necessary are to be applied, such as those related to strategic materials, and so forth, that is one thing. If we provide stand-by controls which affect the livestock industry, as is suggested by the amendment—of course of a discretionary nature only—it will affect to a great degree what will go into the feed lot and what will not go into the feed lot in the next 6 months.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the President deems it necessary to use the permissive controls in case conditions should grow worse, section 709, on page 74, would go into effect. It reads:

SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

I think the Senator knows me well enough to know that I believe in free enterprise. We have tried to include in the bill every safeguard we could think of. Some people think we should not do anything, some think the bill goes too far, while others think the bill does not go far enough. We have tried to go down the middle of the road.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his observation. In that respect I think the committee has done the best it could do with the evidence which was presented.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe that there are different schools of thought on the subject of how far controls should go. Take, for example, strategic materials, such as steel.

Mr. MAYBANK. We have taken into consideration the remarkable progress which the steel mills have made. We have made available funds for their expansion, and so forth. We are not here to knock anyone down, as the Senator knows.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator made the point that there are different schools of thought.

Mr. MAYBANK. Some people recommend that we should put the ceilings into effect immediately.

Mr. WHERRY. The different schools of thought arise from the approach one takes to the bill. Before we can take the proper approach the American people and Congress must know what is in the mind of the administration as to the future which confronts the people of the country. If we knew what was in the mind of the administration, there would not be so much difficulty in granting controls which are asked for in this bill or any other bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I agree with the Senator, but there is no person who can answer the Senator's question. The President cannot answer the question. The Senator knows that no one knows what will happen in the future because of the activities of the Communist satellite and other nations. We simply wish to be prepared and on guard. I cannot answer the question of the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I have had many telegrams from feeders, many of whom are personal friends of mine, and I want to say that an amendment of this kind on stand-by controls would have a definite effect on the price of lambs and also on the number of yearlings that will go into the feed lots. If the situation is so severe that the administration must bring forward a provision of this kind, that is one thing.

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to say to the Senator that I never spoke to the President about stand-by controls. He never asked for them. After hearing witnesses, and receiving hundreds of thousands of telegrams and letters which came to the members of the committee and the committee itself, it was felt by the committee, in its wisdom that it would be proper to grant standby controls, because as the Senator knows, the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard will come to Congress and ask for billions and billions of dollars.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall not ask any further questions of the Senator at this time. I wish to say, however, that this case illustrates what is in my mind and in the minds of a great many people today relative to what controls should be invoked on a standby basis, or otherwise. So far as the junior Senator from Nebraska is concerned, if we knew what was in the mind of the administration—I do not mean the military, but the administration—and what might be put into effect in the nature of controls, it seems to me we could approach the matter with a great deal more assurance. Under those circumstances I believe not only Congress but the American people would be glad to give the controls which are necessary to meet the situation. If we do not know, we are really putting into a strait-jacket discretionary controls, which will be very difficult to take off, as in the case of the amendment to which reference has been made, which would seriously affect the production of meat, a commodity absolutely needed at this time.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the report. The Senator knows that the American people today want something to be done to stop the excessive buying of sugar, meat, lamb, and so forth. I would like to say something on the floor with respect to lumber. I wish I could divulge what was told the committee in executive session. I wish I could tell what has happened to the lumber which the Army and the Navy needed in Alaska. There has been what amounts to a racket in connection with the lumber industry.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not disputing that fact. I am not talking about the merits of controls or the justification for controls. I simply wish we could find out what was in the mind of the administration. If it is not contemplated that controls such as are included in the so-called meat amendment will be used this fall, it would make a terrific difference in the production of livestock. I refer to the livestock that would be placed in the feed lots, which produce the meat which is absolutely needed.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wish to tell my good friend from Nebraska that all I know of what is in the mind of the administration will be found at page 20 and 21 of the committee report in a letter which the President wrote to me, and which I now ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing you in response to your request for my views on the expressed desire of various Members of the Senate to add to the defense production bill (S. 3936) some kind of authority for direct controls over wages, prices, and the distribution of goods to consumers.

It is urgently necessary that the Congress act on the defense production bill without delay. If this measure is enacted promtly, we can do a great deal to ease the economic adjustments which our defense effort will require. At the same time, we can continue on an expedited but careful basis, our planning and preparation for other economic controls, if and when needed.

Of course, there is no objection, in these circumstances, to enactment of additional stand-by control powers which the President could invoke when the need arose. Before my message of July 19, I gave careful thought to the desirability of asking at once for stand-by authority to control prices and wages, and to ration at the consumer level. I refrained from making this proposal to the Congress because it seemed more important to obtain quick action on the powers contained in the defense production bill. To have included a request for stand-by controls might, it seems to me, have dangerously delayed enactment of the immediate program, while the Congress considered these broader authorities. My recommendations of July 19, were designed to meet the problems immediately before us.

The Congress, in its judgment, may now want to make price, wage, and rationing controls available, on a stand-by basis, for use if and when needed. But if the Congress were to take this course, the following conditions appear essential.

First. These additional controls should be supplementary to, and not in lieu of, the basic powers already contained in the defense production bill. The production aids and limited controls for which I have asked, are essential now.

Second. We cannot afford to bog down or delay in enacting what is needed at once, and supplementary provisions should be added only if they do not prolong consideration or delay action in either House.

Third. Any provisions relating to prices and wages should not set up a rigid formula or freeze in advance of experience. If these powers are now made available in advance of widespread need, it is simple common sence that they must be written in a form which allows wide discretion and flexibility as to the method and place and timing of application.

Fourth. For the same reason, any grant of price and wage authority should leave open the question of the method of administration. This should remain flexible, because it cannot be separated from the question of the extent to which price and wage controls actually might have to be applied.

If these reasonable conditions can be met, I should have no objection to the granting of authority beyond that requested in my message of July 19. But if, for any reason, these conditions cannot be met, I urge strongly that the Congress move at once to enact the defense-production bill without including these additional powers.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the letter which the President wrote to the committee. The committee thought that the President should have some stand-by controls. There has been some talk about recessing, and so forth. I know we will not recess.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER, Mr. TAFT, and Mr. HOLLAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield first to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question after reading a statement appearing in this morning's Times-Herald under the by-line of Mr. Walter Trohan. The statement reads:

A persistent but unconfirmed report has it that Mr. Truman has promised CIO President Murray another round of wage increases before any freeze of wages.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that I have met Mr. Murray, but I do not know what he and the President have talked about. I have not seen the President.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am reading the statement which says:

A persistent but unconfirmed report has it that Mr. Truman has promised CIO President Murray another round of wage increases before any freeze of wages.

The question that I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina is: If we have another round of wage increases, does not the Senator think that it would contribute to a further increase in the price of consumer goods?

Mr. MAYBANK. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to ask the Senator various questions about the meaning of the bill which he has described. I may say that so far as the general power of control and most of the titles are concerned I agree certainly on the general necessity for such controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to say that we were very glad to have the suggestions of the Senator from Ohio, and some of his suggestions have been incorporated in the bill. I do not think the Senator has read the full report. Certainly I have not been able to read it, because we did not get through with it until 2 o'clock this morning.

Mr. TAFT. No; I have not tried to do so.

On page 29 of the bill the President is given power, first, to require the setting up of a priority on contracts or orders, or the acceptance of contracts or orders, which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense. When he goes to a company and says, "You must make a thousand tanks," how is the price to be determined? The company must take the contract. The President imposes the contract on the company. What are the terms on which the contract is imposed?

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, a contract is agreed to and both the contractor and the Government try to agree on reasonable and fair terms. Presumably on the company's usual terms and conditions, or comparable terms. Of course, as the Senator knows, there was also renegotiation of contracts in the last war, and I understand from Representative VINSON a renegotiation bill is on its way to the Senate now, which will take care of any excess that might arise.

Mr. TAFT. The only suggestion is, who is going to fix the price? Is the President going to fix the price in the first instance, or who is going to fix it? Is the company to fix the price? What is the intention of the committee as to that power.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is the committee's feeling that it will be done as it was done before, that the company will fix the first price when the contract is made, and that if too great profits are made, as is suggested on page 28 of the report, there will be a readjustment and a fair and reasonable profit will be allowed.

Mr. TAFT. The language is pretty definite. It is, "to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders." What contracts? Is it the contracts written by the President? The intent seems to me, at least, to be to give the President the power to fix the price.

Mr. MAYBANK. He had the same power in the last war. I remember the case of the Ford Motor Co., because I happened to be in the office of Assistant Secretary Patterson when the contract was made. Under the Constitution, no one can delegate the power in such matters except the President of the United States. During the last war, Mr. Knox was Secretary of the Navy, and Mr. Stimson, Secretary of War, and, as I remember, the power was delegated to Assistant Secretary Forrestal and Assistant Secretary Patterson. They made the contracts and the company named the price.

Mr. TAFT. I believe I suggested an amendment to the committee which provided that the company should fix the price and that the contract be subject to renegotiation, under the terms of the Renegotiation Act.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Renegotiation Act has not yet been passed, unfortunately. It is on the way.

Mr. TAFT. There is a renegotiation provision in the current appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. That applies only to certain things, I was told. But this subject is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Some persons testified before the committee on the subject, and the committee recommended that the new plants which might be built should be amortized rapidly, as in World War II, but we could not put such a provision in the bill, because that is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator from Ohio is a member. I did write to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and suggested that the same provision as to new plants be included; namely, that they be amortized over a shorter time following the World War II practice.

Mr. TAFT. One of the broadest powers in the bill is found at the bottom of page 29, in this language:

To allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

Mr. MAYBANK. There again power is vested in the President, for the national defense. If it was a matter involving the Army, he would leave it to the Secretary of War, Mr. Pace. If it involved the Navy, he would leave it to the Secretary of the Navy. If it involved the over-all picture, he would leave it to Chairman Symington.

Mr. TAFT. I am not as much interested in how he exercises the power as in what it is we are giving him power to do.

Mr. MAYBANK. We give him power, for instance, as I read the bill, to take rubber when it is necessary and utilize it in the production of tanks, or what not.

Mr. TAFT. We do not give him power to take anything, under this section. It is "to allocate," not "to take." The "take" section is in another title.

Mr. MAYBANK. Power is given to allocate materials which are produced in or come into the United States.

Mr. TAFT. Under this section the President is given power to put into effect a complete rationing system on the American people, I take it, since the committee expressly deleted the provision that there should not be consumer rationing. I take it this section is broad enough to authorize a complete system of rationing of every commodity the President desires to ration. Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. The language is an exact copy of the the language of the law during World War II. There is nothing in this section that goes beyond the World War II laws, according to the legislative counsel and the staff. I asked them to look at every law, and wherever we went beyond the World War II law, to call it to my attention.

Further along in the bill, as the Senator perhaps knows, there are exemptions relating to newspapers.

Mr. TAFT. If we were in world war III, I would not even ask the question, but we are not in world war III, and I am trying to ascertain whether in time of peace we are giving the President complete power to ration any commodity he wishes to ration.

Mr. MAYBANK. The President never asked for the power. The purpose of the committee was to grant standby power, permissive power, whatever it may be called, in case such power were needed in the future.

Mr. TAFT. In other words, this particular section was broadened in order to fit in with the price and wage control powers given in title IV?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TAFT. It covers not only materials needed for the war, but any material, foodstuff, or anything else, if the President thinks that in some way rationing may be desirable in consideration of the national defense.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. The difference between the Senator and myself is that the Senator speaks of peace. Some people speak of the Korean incident; some people speak of police action. I do not believe that we are exactly in a state of peace now or that there is peace in the world.

Mr. TAFT. Let me ask a question regarding sections 303 and 304, found on pages 35 and 36. Would it not be possible, under those sections, for the Government to go into any business it desired to enter? In other words, under paragraph (a) could not the President purchase any metals, minerals, or other raw materials, which presumably would include foodstuffs of all kinds, "including liquid fuels for Government use or for resale," and then resell them?

Paragraph (c) provides:

> The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

Under section 303 could not the Government go into the steel business or the copper business or any other business into which it desired to enter?

Mr. MAYBANK. It was not the intention of the committee to go as far as the Senator has indicated. I might say that on page 19 of the report the committee goes very fully into the subject.

The report says:

> So far as domestic sources are concerned, it would authorize the direct activation or expansion of operations at individual mines. It would stimulate marginal production and permit such production to reach the market without creating an upward pressure on prices.

We substituted for a sort of subsidy program which had been suggested originally.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator think, however, that under that power the President could put the Government into any manufacturing business he desired to put it into?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is absolutely correct. I stated that this bill carried provision for a great deal of power. I stated that under the Constitution of the United States—and I know the Senator agrees with me—the only person who has the power is the President of the United States. We have written the bill with broad powers on a permissive basis, or whatever sort of basis one may want to call it, hoping and praying that the powers will never have to be used, but providing for them in case a situation should arise in Europe or the Middle East or elsewhere which would make it necessary for them to be used.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that under section 304 the President, without any appropriation being made, may go into business by borrowing a part of the $2,000,000,000 which is granted?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; that is very plain. The language is:

> Any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title—
> Not to exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000.

And under section 305 the President is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Commerce the operations of the various programs set forth.

Mr. TAFT. So that taking those things together, the President, without ever coming to Congress, can borrow $2,000,000,000 and go into any business he wants to go into in the way of purchase of material or in the manufacturing field? Is that a correct interpretation of the section?

Mr. MAYBANK. That could be done under a broad interpretation of the language. Of course the powers are sweeping powers, but as I interpret this section the President could only do so insofar as it was connected with the purchasing or development program for national defense. But I do not imagine that the Appropriations Committee or the watchdog committee—I do not know what the membership of that watchdog committee will be next year, but I presume the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and other present members will be members next year—is going to permit any improper use of such powers.

Mr. TAFT. But the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency does not maintain that the watchdog committee can stop any operations? How can the committee stop them?

Mr. MAYBANK. Such operation could be stopped in the Senate in no time. They could be stopped in the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TAFT. But I am pointing out that since this money can be borrowed as a public-debt transaction, it will not become necessary to go to the Appropriations Committee in order to secure money to enter into business. Is not that what section 304 was written to accomplish?

Mr. MAYBANK. If we get down to minute details the Senator from Ohio is correct. The section gives the President broad powers. But I have enough faith in the President, regardless of who he may be, to believe that he will follow the intent of the legislation and the report of the committee. I have great faith in my friends on the other side of the aisle. I believe the intent, as exhibited in the final conference report, will be carried out by the President.

Mr. TAFT. My experience in the First World War was that once a power was granted, Congress never heard of it again; that not only were the powers availed of to set up organizations and departments directly justified, but in many cases departments were set up which were not covered by statute, and which involved a clear usurpation of authority. I certainly do not think it is a reflection on the President to say that when a power of this kind is once granted to the Executive it is likely to be used, no matter what Congress may put into its reports. I was only interested to find out if the Senator from South Carolina agreed that the power was being granted by this section.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to know, however, what is in the mind of the Senator from Ohio. Of course, there were some abuses in World War II. The Senator from Ohio and I were members of the Committee on Banking and Currency during that war. Probably there were some abuses in World War I. But there were not any abuses in the way of expenditure of funds to create a socialistic economy. The plants which were built in World War II were turned back to private owners, that is, in most instances the private concerns which had operated them bought them, if they were erected with public moneys. That was true with the exception of rubber production plants of the kind which private owners had not previously had.

Mr. TAFT. What I have in mind, frankly, is that if the Federal Government does want to go into one of these businesses—and there may be some justification for doing so, I think the Government ought to come to Congress and receive express authority to go into such business. Last month Congress passed a bill authorizing the Government to go into the business of growing hemp in Central America. I was doubtful about that action, but we were told that it was the only way to secure the hemp, and thereafter I did not object further to the bill. We have a tremendously large private plant or industrial development in this country. If the Government wants to go into any kind of business, it ought to tell Congress what it is, and ask authority to go into that particular business. We ought not to grant a wide-open power to the Government to go into any business it wants to go into, and give the Government $2,000,000,000 to do it, without further check by Congress.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not think the Government is going to do anything like that. I believe as much in private enterprise as does the distinguished Senator from Ohio, and he knows it. I believe the Government should aid private industry in such matters as the production of copper, steel, and so forth. But there are some fields into which the Government must enter. For example, the synthetic-rubber field. The other day the Government reopened a synthetic-rubber plant.

Mr. TAFT. My recollection is that the Government has power to do that and does not need additional authority to do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Government should also do research work. The senior Senator from Wyoming. [Mr O'MAHONEY], in testifying before the committee, said that the Government should proceed to develop manganese production and the production of other ores. For example, taconite, or low-grade iron ore. We had testimony from the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], who recommended a program for the development of such ore, as well as from the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY]. We have had the testimony of geologists and others who have studied the question of low-grade ores on Lake Superior which can be developed by the Government. I do not know about that personally, for I have never been there, so I must rely upon the testimony of others.

Mr. TAFT. Referring to title IV, price and wage stabilization, may I ask whether that title gives the President the power to impose price control without any general regulation of wages, if he wishes to do so?

Mr. MAYBANK. If the President proceeds to impose general price controls, he must freeze wages.

Mr. TAFT. He must? Is there such a provision?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; on page 42.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Carolina please raise his voice, and restate what he has just said?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Ohio asked me: If the President imposes general over-all price controls, must he freeze wages? On line 9, page 42, is this language:

> Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials, services, and property comprising a substantial part—

I cite that language in reply to the question the Senator asked me. Section (b), which gives selective controls above the retail level, as the Senator knows, was eliminated by the House yesterday, but this section (c) also authorizes selective controls at all levels. I continue:

> a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I promised the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] that I would yield to him next after having yielded to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have a few questions more. I should like to finish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; aid if so, to whom?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Ohio asked me to yield, and I yielded to him. I told the Senator from Florida I would yield to him next. Thereafter I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Delaware. I am sorry to have to keep him waiting.

Mr. TAFT. As to the matter of standby control——

Mr. MAYBANK. Which is permissive.

Mr. TAFT. How does that differ from the Price Control Act of World War II? That was purely authority to the President to impose such control if he wanted to do so. It did not compel him to do so, if I correctly recollect.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the President believes the situation on the home front has become grave enough by reason of the enormous armament program which is going to take place, the President may impose controls. He does not have to do so any more than he was compelled to do so under the World War II act. Some people think controls ought to be imposed tomorrow morning. Some do not believe they ought to be imposed at all.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator feel that the imposition of price and wage stabilization measures represents a completely fundamental change in our whole economy—from a free economy to a regulated economy?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; I do; and I hope the day will never come when the President will have to put such a program into effect, but it may come.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator feel that Congress should decide the question whether this shall be a free economy or a regulated economy country; that the Congress should determine whether the emergency has arisen which would justify such a change?

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, I agree with the Senator. That is why the bill is before us. That is why I said that I appreciated what had been done by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and others before the bill came to the floor. But time is of the essence. I do not know what the Senate will do with the bill. I hope it will be passed.

Mr. TAFT. When the Price Control Act of 1942 was enacted, it was enacted with the purpose of putting into effect controls when the Congress decided it was time to do so. The Congress passed the law. Now it seems to me we are completely abdicating our authority, abdicating our duties, if we leave to the President the question of determining whether we shall turn the United States from a free economy country into, in effect, a dictated economy country.

Mr. MAYBANK. The only way that possibly can be done by the President will be after consultations, but we hope such a thing will not happen. Conditions will have to become much worse before it can happen.

I was with the Senator from Ohio in the District of Columbia Committee room in 1942, as I am sure the Senator from Ohio remembers, on the night when we provided for the first OPA. However, that was done after Pearl Harbor, and after we had allies who had been fighting for 3 years.

Our present situation is somewhat different, in my judgment. I may be wrong; I hope I am.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am unwilling to delegate to any person the right to say that the time now has come when we must abandon a free economy and must temporarily, because of an emergency, put into operation a system of wage and price controls. If such a system is put into effect, Congress should do it. Congress can return later to make that decision, if it thinks the occasion for invoking that system has arisen.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course we differ on these subjects, Mr. President. I hope such powers will never be used; but if they are used, I hope they are used only after an emergency has developed and after full consultations have been held.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from South Carolina a question: What is the value of title V, relating to the settlement of labor disputes? That title was stricken from the House bill; and I cannot see why it adds anything to the powers the President now has under the general mediation laws. I refer to pages 57 and 58.

Today the President has full power to conciliate any dispute. This provision of the bill apparently does not give the President the power to compel men to go back to work or anything of that sort. It seems to me it merely authorizes the President to do things contrary to the general policies established for the settlement of labor disputes.

Mr. MAYBANK. We had in mind the War Labor Board and other things——

Mr. TAFT. Under title IV, the War Labor Board——

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask the Senator to permit me to finish my statement, please. I was going to say that there were some members of the committee who raised the point the Senator from Ohio has raised. We have made a full report on the bill, including a report on that question. It would take me some time to read that portion of the report now, although if the Senator from Ohio wishes me to do so, I shall read it to the Senate.

That matter is dealt with on page 40 of the report, where the statement is made:

> This title is intended to strengthen the national defense effort by giving the President the necessary authority to prevent interruption of production by labor disputes which affect the national defense.

Later in the report appears the following statement:

> This title does not alter existing labor standards and labor-relations statutes; on the contrary, no action can be taken under this title which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947—

And so forth.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot see how that title of the bill possibly adds anything to the existing statutes relative to the settlement of labor disputes. Of course, under the provisions of title IV, if the President had the power to fix wages, he would have the power to appoint a board to do what the War Labor Board did.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Let me also point out that on page 41 the report reads as follows:

> In an emergency period we can ill afford to permit labor disputes to follow their normal course to eventual settlement. The institution of price and wage stabilization provided for under title IV of this bill would add to the strain upon normal collective bargaining.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot see why title V is not completely superfluous and would encourage the President to repeal some of the existing provisions of law.

Mr. MAYBANK. That title gives the President power to mediate in such way as he may see fit to do.

Mr. TAFT. But the President already has that power.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; but this title of the bill would encourage him to use it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wonder whether the distinguished Senator from South Carolina will yield to me temporarily, without losing his right to the floor, to permit me to ask a few questions or to make a statement in discussion with the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MAYBANK. Previously I had promised to yield next to the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to address an inquiry to the Senator from Ohio, if I am yielded to for that purpose, because I think that by means of a very simple process it is possible to make the Senator from Ohio a convert to the principles of this bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Then, Mr. President, I yield now to the Senator from Illinois, provided that I may do so without losing my right to the floor. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may yield to the Senator from Illinois, to permit him to address an inquiry to the Senator from Ohio, without causing the Senator from South Carolina to lose the floor.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, not only do I wish to address a question or two to the Senator from Ohio, if he will permit——

Mr. TAFT. Certainly, although I intend to speak on the subject myself tomorrow.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But also I wish to make a brief statement in this connection.

Mr. President, I found myself in considerable sympathy with the Senator from Ohio when he declared that the Congress should not give complete discretionary power to the Executive.

So I wondered whether the Senator from Ohio was a convert to the formula of the Fulbright proposal, which lays down legislative criteria which will guide the President, instead of giving him complete discretion.

As I heard the Senator from Ohio speak, I thought he was fit territory for conversion, so to speak.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have read the Fulbright proposal, and in a general way I regard it very favorably. The question is whether the index proposals are practical.

I have not gone into that question, and I do not know whether I shall support that measure; but certainly it is a very worthy proposal and is a great improvement over the proposal in the bill now before us.

On the other hand, we could add to this bill a provision that title IV would go into effect only when Congress passed a joint resolution to that effect, or something of that sort.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield at this time to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for yielding to me; and I congratulate him and the other members of his committee for the fine work they have done in studying the bill and in reporting it in materially changed form.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina several questions in reference to the control of credits, relative to construction on real estate as they appear in the new bill and as they contrast with the much broader principles which were incorporated in the original bill.

As a predicate for my questions, I should like to ask the Senator if he will be willing to permit me to request unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a copy of subtitle A of Title IV of the original draft of the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then I make such request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real-estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed, and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory insurance service connected with any such goods or interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property (including leasehold and other interests therein); credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying such property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving such property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use such property.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services; either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person," in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SEC. 403. The first sentence of section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as added by section 1 of the act of June 27, 1950 (Public Law 576, 81st Cong.), is amended to read as follows: "No member of a Federal home loan bank shall make or purchase any loan at any time when its cash and obligations of the United States are not equal to such amount as the Home Loan Bank Board shall by regulations prescribe: Provide, That such amount shall not be less than 4 percent or more than 20 percent of the obligation of the member or withdrawable accounts or, in the case of any member insurance company, such other base as the Board may determine to be comparable."; and the last sentence of said section 5A is amended to read as follows: "This section shall be effective upon the enactment of the Defense Production Act of 1950."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that when I introduced the original bill, I made the statement that no doubt changes would be proposed to it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I understand. I understood thoroughly that the Senator from South Carolina was requested to introduce the original bill, and that he introduced it by request, and that he was not in accord with some of the provisions of title IV of the original bill, which I understand have been very radically changed, as the bill has now been reported by the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. I understand that those changes are to be found in the provisions of title VI of the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. President, I have already asked to have incorporated in the RECORD, and there has been ordered to be placed in the RECORD, as the basis of my questions, all of subtitle A of title IV of the original draft of the bill.

My first question is this: Am I correct in my understanding that the general control of all credits and all dealings involving the use or title to real estate, as provisions for that purpose were incorporated in title IV of the original bill, has been entirely omitted, except as such subjects are in small part continued in title VI of the committee draft of the bill? Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. I would say that so far as I know and so far as I have been able to ascertain, the Senator is correct.

As I recall, we eliminated provision for certain authority which was proposed to be given to the President, and voted to have certain authority transferred to the Federal Reserve Board. We limited the bill so far as it applies to private financing to new construction or to the reconstruction of dwellings, under the Federal Reserve Board's power to control credit.

It is my understanding that reconstruction, for instance, would be a case in which someone had a small house and wished to get around the law by spending a large amount of money in rebuilding it so that it would be the same as a new house.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

I should like to ask him specifically, now, if it is correct that the only provisions left, under the committee draft of the bill as reported to the Senate, and as now under debate, relative to the control of credits in real-estate construction, pertain to two classes of construction, both of them future construction.

Mr. MAYBANK. What future construction is was a question which the committee gave much thought. It finally decided that any construction begun after August 3, meridian time, could be considered as future or new construction.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then am I correct in my understanding that all the controls proposed relative to real estate proposed in the bill we are now considering have to do solely with future construction? Is that correct? That was my first question.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, the Senator understands that reconstruction is included, along with new construction. I do not have the President's letters in front of me, but I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the letters which the President wrote to Mr. Foley, Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Mr. Gray, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and Mr. Hise, chairman of the RFC, if my memory serves me correctly, in connection with a letter which I received 2 or 3 weeks ago, the President ordered approximately a 30 percent curtailment in public housing immediately and a reduction in loan ratios on FHA insured and VA guaranteed financing.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 18, 1950.

The President today sent the letters which follow to the Honorable Raymond M. Foley, Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency; the Honorable Carl R. Gray, Jr., Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and the Honorable Harley Hise, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Copies of these letters were sent to the Honorable Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture; the Honorable Thomas B. McCabe, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Honorable Maple T. Harl, Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Following is the text of the letter to Mr. Foley:

"MY DEAR MR. ADMINISTRATOR: The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has transmitted to me your recommendation that the aggregate outstanding amount of mortgages which may be insured under title II of the National Housing Act be increased by all or some part of the remaining $1,250,000,000 authorized by the Congress.

"The Housing Act of 1950 requires that the President make a determination, before authorizing an increase in the statutary limit of the aggregate amount of insured mortgages, that such an increase would be in the public interest, taking into account the general effect of any such increase upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy.

"As you know, residential construction in the last several months has risen to very high levels. Continuance of high levels would be entirely desirable, were it not for recent international developments. As suggested in your letter, it is already clear that, as a result of events of the last month, many materials used in residential and other construction will be required in increasing amounts for national defense purposes. It is imperative that these requirements be met fully and without delay. These increased demands will aggravate inflationary tendencies already evident in some of these materials unless positive actions are taken to reduce pressures in residential construction.

"For this reason, I do not believe that it would be in the public interest to authorize the full increase of $1,250,000,000 in the authority to insure new mortgages. Accordingly, pursuant to the authority of section 203 (a) of the National Housing Act, I hereby approve an increase of $650,000,000 in the aggregate outstanding amount of mortgages which may be insured under title II of said act, thereby increasing the insurance authorization under said title to $8,400,000,000.

"For the same reason, I request that the Housing and Home Finance Agency and its constituent agencies take the following administrative actions:

"1. Employ as a ceiling in analyzing property for mortgage insurance purposes the construction costs existing on July 1, 1950.

"2. Reduce on all future applications for mortgage insurance, the maximum principal amounts, or the maximum percentages of appraised value or cost, or both, of mortgages so that required down payments will be substantially increased, especially for higher priced housing, excluding military housing and the Alaska housing program.

"3. Require substantial down payments for modernization and repair loans.

"4. Reduce substantially the availability of Federal Home loan bank credit to member institutions especially for business expansion purposes, and, through supervisory action, encourage the application of stricter credit standards on new mortgage loans by member home financing institutions.

"5. Limit the commencement of construction of public housing to not more than 30,000 dwelling units in the first 6 months of fiscal year 1951, during which time the public housing program should be thoroughly reexamined in terms of the developing international situation.

"6. Suspend for the time being commitments for direct loans for the construction of housing by educational institutions.

"7. Take such further actions as in your judgment are or may become necessary and appropriate (such as restriction of size of projects built for sale) to curtail the use in residential construction of materials essential to national defense.

"Attached for your information is a copy of my letter of today's date to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. It is my wish that both agencies accomplish a substantial and parallel curtailment of housing credit, but in such a way that the relative preference presently accorded veterans is preserved. I would appreciate it, therefore, if you will consult with the Veterans' Administrator in working out the details of these programs, and advise my office of any problem which remains unresolved.

"Attached also for your information is a copy of my letter to the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation regarding operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association. I would appreciate your cooperating with him in the planning and execution of the actions which I have requested.

"Sincerely yours,

"HARRY S. TRUMAN."

The letter to Mr. Gray follows:

"MY DEAR MR. ADMINISTRATOR: As you know, residential construction in the last several months has risen to very high levels. Continuance of high levels would be entirely desirable, were it not for recent international developments. It is already clear that, as a result of events of the last month, many materials used in residential and other construction will be required in increasing amounts for national defense purposes. It is imperative that these requirements be met fully and without delay. These increased demands will aggravate inflationary tendencies already evident in some of these materials unless positive actions are taken to reduce pressures in residential construction.

"For this reason, I request that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs take the following administrative actions:

"(1) Require a cash down payment of at least 5 percent for all loans guaranteed, insured, or made by the Veterans' Administration, wherever permissible under existing law.

"(2) Increase such required cash down payments in amounts equal to any increase in appraised value occasioned by recognized increases in construction costs over those existing on July 1, 1950.

"(3) Restrict direct loan authorizations in each calendar quarter of fiscal year 1951 to one-fourth of the total amount authorized for the fiscal year.

"(4) Take such further actions as in your judgment may become necessary and appropriate (such as restriction of size of projects built for sale) to curtail the use in residential construction of materials essential to national defense.

"Attached for your information is a copy of my letter of today's date to the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. It is my wish that both agencies accomplish a substantial and parallel curtailment of housing credit, but in such a way that the relative preference presently accorded veterans is preserved. I would appreciate it, therefore, if you will consult with the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency in working out the details of these programs, and advise my office of any problem which remains unresolved.

"Very sincerely yours,

"HARRY S. TRUMAN."

The text of the letter to Mr. Hise follows:

"DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you know, residential construction in the last several months has risen to very high levels. Continuance of high levels would be entirely desirable, were it not for recent international developments. It is already clear that, as a result of events of the last month, many materials used in residential and other construction will be required in increasing amounts for national-defense purposes. It is imperative that these requirements be met fully and without delay. These increased demands will aggravate inflationary tendencies already evident in some of these materials unless positive actions are taken to reduce pressures in residential construction.

"Enclosed for your information are letters I have addressed to the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, requesting them to take certain steps to restrain the expansion of housing credit.

"As a corollary to the actions which I have asked these agencies to take, I request you to reexamine immediately the regulations of the Federal National Mortgage Association governing both the purchase and sale of insured and guaranteed mortgages. I understand that the current regulations governing the purchase of mortgages have substantially reduced the volume of purchases. This situation should be carefully watched to make sure that further mortgage purchases are held to the irreducible minimum.

"I also understand that sales of mortgages owned by the Federal National Mortgage Association have been stepped up considerably in recent months. I am sure you will agree, however, that in the present situation sales efforts should be further intensified in order to absorb, as much as possible, surplus funds seeking investment in residential mortgages.

"Inasmuch as the Federal National Mortgage Association will soon be transferred to the Housing and Home Finance Agency, I would appreciate your working closely with the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency in the planning and execution of these actions.

"Very sincerely yours,

"HARRY S. TRUMAN."

Mr. HOLLAND. I quote from the report of the committee a sentence appearing at the top of page 48, as a basis for my next question. The statement quoted from the report reads as follows:

It—

Meaning the committee—

has removed from such provisions all control over credit with respect to existing construction, so that control of conventional credit would be applicable only to future construction of structures or major additions or improvements to structures.

Is that sentence, as quoted, a correct statement of the provisions of the committee bill relative to conventional credit?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is exactly what the committee did. This section was written for the purpose of slowing down and stopping the hoarding of essential national-defense supplies, such as lumber, soil pipe, and other materials.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator has stated, and this accords with my understanding, that the provision of the committee bill with reference to conventional credit for the construction of either residential or any other type of construction applies solely to future construction, not to existing construction.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is absolutely correct. I do not want to confuse the record regarding the August 3 date line, because it was unanimously agreed by the committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, that we had to include some date line. As the Senator knows, we have been working on this bill in the committee since July 19. That section, as I remember, probably was written on August 2. If we did not choose a date there would be a mad rush to get construction under way before the deadline, and prices would be forced up even higher.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator. May I ask him to state whether my understanding of the term "conventional credit," as used by the committee, is correct? I understand that term to apply to a credit by all agencies whatsoever, except the Federal Government.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is right; to all financing except Government financing and Government-insured financing.

Mr. HOLLAND. Therefore, this provision would relate to all ordinary construction in the future financed by banks or by private lenders, or by builders financed from any other source except if insured or guaranteed by the Government?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. That will be true, under the Federal Reserve regulations.

Mr. HOLLAND. In reference to conventional credit, is my understanding correct that, applying only to future construction financed by conventional credit, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank is given power, by regulations issued from time to time, to control the terms upon which such credit shall be given?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. I may say to the Senator that we went further than that. After we wrote this section we placed in the bill a voluntary control program for the Federal Reserve such as that provided for Secretary Sawyer in connection with steel, and so forth. Of course, it does not necessarily have to be voluntary. But it was Mr. McCabe's desire and the desire of the attorneys for the Federal Reserve Board that they should get all the banks together. I think they have done a pretty good job in the past, and I think they will do a good job in the future. If they can work out something voluntarily, we want them to do it. That is provided for. I do not say it will work out, but there is that possibility.

Mr. HOLLAND. The provisions of the new bill, namely, the committee bill, which deals with these new extensions of conventional credit, are section 602 and the related sections; and am I correct in my understanding that section 605 of the committee bill relates solely to nonconventional credit—that is, Government credit?

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator will refer to page 50 of the committee report, he will observe that section 605 "would round out the authority of the President to control future real-estate loans, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government." That is FHA. The Senator probably knows that.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the Senator object if I quote that sentence in full into the RECORD at this time?

Mr. MAYBANK. No, I should be glad to have the Senator do so, because we desire to have the RECORD absolutely correct. I am glad the Senator brought that up.

Mr. HOLLAND. The sentence shown on page 50 of the report, to which the Senator has referred, reads in full as follows:

SEC. 605. This section would round out the authority of the President to control future real-estate loans made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government, as distinguished from conventional real-estate loans covered by section 602.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Section 605 then makes reference to future loans under nonconventional credits, which has to do solely with credits extended by agencies of the Federal Government, does it not?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Under section 605, the President is given authority, after having conferred with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank and with the Federal housing officials, by his order, to control future credits financed or insured by Federal governmental agencies. Is that not true?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. The President also asked for coordination and cooperation between the Home Finance Agency and the Federal Reserve Board, so that they can get the over-all picture, instead of operating separately. We hope they will work together as a team, and I have every reason to believe they will.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, the Senator from Florida has two additional questions. He hopes he is not trespassing upon the patience of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Not at all. I am always glad to yield to my friend from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. The first question is this: Is the Senator from Florida correct in his understanding that section 403 of the original bill, relating to Federal Home Loan Banks, has been entirely omitted from the committee bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the Senator from Florida that, in view of the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency had but recently legislated with respect to that most efficient agency, we completely eliminated it from the bill. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator. There is but one more question I wish to address to him, and that has to do with price control and those sections of the new bill which relate to price control, namely, title IV and the sections contained in it.

Mr. MAYBANK. There are plenty of sections.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is the Senator from Florida correct in his understanding that price control, with reference to real estate and all kinds of real estate transactions, is entirely omitted from the committee bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Under section 402 (f) it is entirely omitted. The only real estate section is title VI, itself, under which controls are placed upon private financing by the Federal Reserve Board, and on public financing, by the President, through the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Mr. HOLLAND. In both instances only as to future building?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct as far as private or conventional financing is concerned. In the case of public financing or insuring, the controls apply to all future loans, whenever the building was built.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I greatly appreciate the patience of the Senator from South Carolina. He has answered very fully and meticulously. I want to say that he and his committee are entitled to very great credit for having made these sweeping changes in the text of the original bill as contained in title IV as it was introduced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to refer the chairman of the committee to page 42 of the bill, where it provides:

Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials, services, and property comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

My question is this: In the event the President decides to put a ceiling on prices as of any given date, will the ceiling on wages and on salaries have to be effective on the same date, or can there be one ceiling applied in June and the other in March, for instance?

Mr. MAYBANK. Presumably, they would be applied on the same date, on the basis of May 24 to June 24, as to what the prices were at that time. If wages had not been increased, for instance, and there should be a round of wage increases before October, the May and June price figures might have to be increased to take care of that situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not quite follow the Senator. Am I correct in understanding that if prices are rolled back to June 24, we would roll wages back to June 24?

Mr. MAYBANK. Not necessarily to the same date.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If wages had gone up between June and October, would we roll the prices back?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; if we could not roll the wages back we probably could not roll the prices back.

Of course the price of food has gone up; sugar has gone up; rubber has gone up 36 cents a pound; but if there has been no general wage increase I do not see why wages should be rolled back. But if we want to roll back prices and, in the meantime, wages have been raised, the prices would have to be adjusted so that the wage earner would not be injured.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us forget about the increased prices which have taken effect since June 24. My understanding is that if the President decides to roll prices back to June 24, wages will be rolled back to the same date.

Mr. MAYBANK. There is no necessary connection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How can we roll back one without rolling back the other?

Mr. MAYBANK. The President cannot roll them back without consultation and ascertaining what the costs have been. He can select a different date. The date of May 24 to June 24 is only the minimum to which he could go back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Could he select a date for wages and another date for prices?

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, that may be the fairest and most equitable way of doing it—both to the employer as well as the employee.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. This is what the bill provides in the case of wages:

No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938—

And so forth. Since wages and salaries are usually changed at relatively infrequent intervals, the level of wages and salaries prevailing in the base period represents contracts entered into, on the average, well before the base period. In effect, therefore, wages and salaries during the base period reflect the market conditions of an earlier period, while the level of prices in the base period generally reflects the market conditions in that period. Under those circumstances it is highly desirable to provide for any possible roll-back of wages and salaries while permitting a more flexible situation with regard to prices.

In other words, if the CIO or the A. F. of L. signs a contract with some organization to run a year ahead, if there is no strike, the contract goes ahead. Automobile prices may go up or down, while the wages are still maintained at the same level.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Suppose that by October or November of this year we shall have gone through another round of wage increases, but that after that date prices are frozen on all commodities, and the President selects June 24 as the base date. What would he do with regard to wages, assuming that in the meantime there had been a round of wage increases?

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. In a moment.

The President has permissive power. He could either stabilize them as of that date, or he could roll them back. He could do either.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I might be able to help a little bit. Keep in mind that the date of June 24, or any of those dates, are base dates. The President does not have to roll prices back to that point. We are simply providing that they cannot be rolled back to a point lower than the point at which they were on a given date. The President would show very poor judgment if he rolled prices back to June 24 if wages in the meantime had gone up.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the point which the Senator from Indiana has made, but it could be done, under the bill, could it not?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; he could freeze them as of the date of the freeze, or he could roll them back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator think it is possible, in all fairness to the different groups, to select any date as a base period other than some date prior to the outbreak in Korea? There is a certain type of merchant or manufacturer who, immediately after the outbreak in Korea, raised prices and began charging all the traffic would bear. There is another group who, through patriotism and respect for their customers, held their prices down. Are we penalizing those who cooperate in trying to resist the inflationary spiral, and paying a premium to the others?

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with the words of the distinguished Senator from Delaware. That is the reason why we selected this date—because of the honest businessman who did not try to make a lot of money because of the Korean situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Regardless of any date we fix, there will be certain commodities whose prices are artificially high.

Mr. MAYBANK. Those prices will be adjusted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Both wages and prices?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Any variation would be on a percentage basis, using the pre-Korean date as a base?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is essentially correct.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, when the Korean conflict began——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. THYE. Yes; I shall ask a question, and I shall refer to steel because we shall again use steel to a great extent and probably shall put a greater drain on our resources of iron ore than we had thought before the Korean crisis. Because of that situation I wanted to ask the able Senator from South Carolina whether the bill is broad enough to allow the development of a processing plant.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator yield for a moment so that I may make a short statement?

Mr. THYE. I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. The distinguished Senator from Minnesota was called from the Chamber while I was addressing the Senate on that point. I called the attention of the Senate to the bill of the Senator which was before the committee in connection with low-grade ores in the Lake Superior area. I said I believed that the bill would be sufficient to help the mining of such ores under the $2,000,000,000 loan fund provided for in the bill. I referred to that while the Senator was called to the telephone.

Mr. THYE. I am very happy to have the chairman make the explanation. I left the Chamber to answer a long-distance telephone call from Duluth, and as I was returning to the floor a family, who are visiting the Capitol, called me into the reception room.

Mr. MAYBANK. While the Senator from Minnesota was talking about Minnesota in the reception room, as he should have been, I was talking about Minnesota on the floor.

Mr. THYE. I am very happy to have the Senator make the explanation that the act is broad enough to permit the development of low-grade iron ore in Minnesota. We cannot continue indefinitely draining our high-grade iron ore. If we do so, we shall face a serious situation, because if we exhaust our high-grade ore and become dependent on imports of ore from other nations to supply our needs, we may find that we have put ourselves in a very precarious position.

Mr. MAYBANK. When the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] was questioning me on the $2,000,000,000 loan fund I called attention to the absolute need and necessity for the exploration for low-grade ores in the Lake Superior region, and the necessity for the exploration for manganese deposits in Wyoming and other Western States. That is the reason the $2,000,000,000 provision was put in the bill. It was put in the bill not for the purpose of building many plants to be competitive to industries which are already doing a good job, but to explore and develop American resources rather than to continually drain American dollars into foreign countries and use foreign resources.

Mr. THYE. I had an amendment prepared to the bill, but in view of what the able chairman has stated relative to the provision in the bill, I believe there is no necessity for offering the amendment. Does the able Senator agree?

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not think it will be necessary, because I do not think we can legislate on any particular item. If we made an exception in one case, we would have to legislate, for example, with respect to manganese, tin, and so forth. It is all in title II. I may say that the Senator will find the letter which he wrote to me included in the hearings.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator. I should like to ask one other question. I refer to the subject of roll-backs. I am sure the Senator has in mind and has a complete understanding of the fact that if we were to roll back prices of dairy products, for example, to a date in May or June we would find that dairy products were at an all time yearly low in the spring due to flush high production.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the Senator, who is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that the committee went fully into that with Mr. Trigg. As I remember, on June 15 soybeans, lambs, beef cattle, and wool were at parity. Milk was far below parity.

Mr. THYE. It was far below. Eggs, too, were far below parity. If we rolled back the prices of these commodities, which were below parity, we would do a great injustice to them.

Mr. MAYBANK. That could not be done under the law. Those prices could not be rolled back below parity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act which the Senator from Minnesota helped write.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask the Senator to refer to page 17.

Mr. THYE. Page 17 of the report?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. The Senator will note the reference to steel. For example, taconite plants require 2 or 3 years to build and an investment of approximately $20 per ton of annual capacity. That testimony was brought out before the committee by professors and the dean of the University of Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. The university has made long studies on the subject of taconite.

Mr. MAYBANK. They appeared before the committee.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. STENNIS. As the Senator knows, this bill has not been before the Senate for a long time. The report was filed only this morning. I was very much impressed with it, and I shall support generally the bill. I want to ask him about the setting of prices on cotton, and call his particular attention to the fact that between the date of June 24 and the time the cotton is harvested and ginned, there can be an accumulation of very high production costs in the way of repeated applications of poison, depending on weather, weevil infestation, and a number of other elements. Is the Senator prepared to indicate how a situation of that kind could be taken care of?

Mr. MAYBANK. What did the Senator suggest?

Mr. STENNIS. I was calling the Senator's attention to the fact that between the date of June 24 and the time cotton is harvested and ready for market there can be quite an accumulated cost in the gathering of it, particularly with reference to boll-weevil infestation and repeated applications of poison. As the weather varies and the infestation varies, these costs could run up very high. Would those items be taken into consideration?

Mr. MAYBANK. I come from a cotton State and I know a little about cotton. I am familiar with the fact that the cotton crop last year was 16,200,000 bales. I am familiar with the fact that on Tuesday the crop was estimated by the Department of Agriculture, as the Senator knows, at 10,300,000 bales. That represents a loss of 36 percent, mainly because of the boll-weevil infestation, because of the cold spring, and because of acreage reductions. As Mr. Trigg testified before the committee—and I intend to put the testimony into the RECORD before we get through—the Korean situation had nothing to do with the advance in the price of cotton which was caused by the 36-percent reduction in the crop.

I know that the Senator from Mississippi is an able lawyer and was a distinguished jurist. I wrote an amendment, which I intend to offer as a committee amendment, proposing on page 45, at lines 9 and 10, to strike out "fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable" and to insert in lieu thereof "agricultural commodity." The adoption of the amendment would give the Department permission, should any roll-back in price come about, to consider:

Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substanial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields unusual increases in costs of production—

That would cover boll weevil infestation, and so forth. I know the hardship which the people of the Senator's State and my State are enduring because of the tragedies which are brought about by adverse weather conditions.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator. I am very much pleased that he has a definite plan and will offer the amendment to which he has referred.

Mr. MAYBANK. As a committee amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. I understand it will be a committee amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. STENNIS. When it has been approved by the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. I discussed it with some members of the committee. I know that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is very much in favor of taking care of the situation, and so is the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

Mr. STENNIS. I certainly think that would be very salutary, sound, and fair amendment, and I wish to thank the Senator and the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, it is not my desire to take very much time in discussing some of the features of the pending bill at this time, but I wish to use a little time now because I consider this measure to be of great importance and to represent, at least to some extent, a departure from what we have done in the past.

Mr. President, this measure is far-reaching; it gives unusual and great powers to the President. It places within the discretion of the President the question whether the powers referred to in the bill shall be used, when they shall be used, and under what conditions they shall be used.

In order that we may have the entire measure before us, I should like to review very briefly the principal provisions of the bill.

The bill which was originally introduced, and upon which hearings were held before the Banking and Currency Committee, called for the establishment of priorities and allocations in the case of scarce materials or materials in short supply. It also called for a program whereby our productive capacity might be expanded to meet such needs as our mobilization effort might call for.

Roughly speaking, under the expansion program there was requested in the original bill a provision whereby production loans could be made—loans of the same nature and class as the well-known V-loans which were made during World War II.

There was also requested a provision whereby direct loans could be made to private industry, to aid in the building or the expansion of plants, to aid in the production of the supplies and materials which might be required in our defense effort. That requested program parallels one we had during World War II, under which a great deal of good was accomplished.

I may say the same thing in reference to the V-loan program. I do not have the figures before me at the moment; but as I recall, more than $10,000,000,000 was loaned in the form of V-loans during World War II, and 90 percent or more of those loans went to the small businesses of the United States and made it possible for them to participate fully in the wonderful production program this country staged during World War II.

The direct loans for plant expansion constituted another very worth-while program during World War II, and at least a parallel program was requested in the bill which recently came before us.

Another provision would have given to the President the power to establish such Government corporations as it might be necessary to aid in carrying on the program.

The committee approved the V-loan program. The committee approved the program for providing for loans for plant expansion. The committee also approved a provision, which I did not mention in my description a moment ago, in reference to the purchase of such materials and supplies as might be required.

The committee also approved the program for the requisitioning of plant facilities and materials, where that might be necessary in aiding the defense program.

However, the committee did not approve in whole the proposal to permit the President to organize new Government corporations. The committee voted to give the President the right to organize new agencies to have very largely the same powers which the proposed Government corporations would have had.

Frankly, Mr. President, I personally was in favor of giving the President the power to organize new Government corporations because I believe that in carrying on such a program—a program of a high degree of mobilization, if we reach that point—it will be necessary for the President to have that power in order that there may be sufficient flexibility to permit the meeting of the business demands which will be made.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or does he care to yield at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I am interested in what the junior Senator from Alabama has had to say about the proposal to organize new Government agencies, rather than new Government corporations. Is it the judgment of the junior Senator from Alabama that if new Government agencies rather than new Government corporations were established we probably would have to go through a more extensive and prolonged period in order to get the job done, as compared to what would have been the situation if we permitted the inclusion in this bill of a provision for some pattern or form of a new Government corporate set-up?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, I believe the simpler and more businesslike method of handling the matter would be to provide for the setting up of new Government corporations possessing corporate powers and with the flexibility of corporations.

Of course, the opposition to that proposal was very largely based upon an objection which has been posed from time to time by the Comptroller General of the United States. He has objected to the auditing of the accounts of Government corporations, as opposed to the auditing of accounts of the regular Government agencies.

I believe that had it not been for the feeling on the part of many Members of the committee that the auditing of the accounts of Government agencies was better than the auditing of the accounts of Government corporations under the Government Corporation Control Act, the committee would have voted in favor of the provision which had been requested.

Personally, I felt that we should have done it anyway; but a majority of the committee felt otherwise. For that reason, the bill has been reported in the form in which it now comes before the Senate—in short, denying the right to organize new Government corporations.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does the Senator from Alabama feel that it would have been cheaper, from the standpoint of the American taxpayer, to have continued to proceed by means of Government corporate set-ups, rather than by means of new Government agency set-ups?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, personally I feel that is true—in short, that it would have been cheaper, simpler, more efficient, and more effective.

As I said a moment ago, I am convinced that if we reach a reasonably high degree of mobilization—and I think we shall—it will be necessary to change this provision and to give the President the right to establish new Government corporations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that if Government corporations were established it would be impossible for the Comptroller General, as an agent of the Congress, to audit the books of such organizations, and therefore those corporations would be out from underneath any congressional control, whereas if they were agencies, we would, at least, be able to check up and see how the money was spent. Is not that true?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I must say that I do not agree with my friend the able and distinguished Senator from Illinois. As a matter of fact, the committee had before it, at the time when it was considering this proposal, a letter from Mr. Lindsay Warren, Comptroller General of the United States, in which he suggested merely the changing of four words. He said that he felt that change would have brought the corporations proposed to be organized clearly under the Government Corporation Control Act, and would have made it possible for their accounts to be properly audited by the Comptroller General. I felt that we should have adopted the amendment suggested by the Comptroller General and should have given the President the right to organize corporations.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Whether it be as a corporation or as an agency, does not the Senator agree that we are giving the President $2,000,000,000 with which to go into any business he desires?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; that is correct. Of course, when the Senator says "any business he desires," I at least would certainly limit it to the objectives of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. But would the President so limit it? It was only 2 years ago that the President told the Congress that he thought he ought to have power to go into the steel business, and he caused to be introduced in the House of Representatives the Spence bill, giving him exactly the authority in peacetime which is sought in this bill. If he believed he ought to have that power—and the terms of the bill are broad enough to cover almost any commodity—why does the Senator think the President necessarily will feel in any way confined to those things that are needed for the Army?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not think the Senator's deductions are at all correct. Under the terms of this bill, I do not think the Government is authorized to go into business generally. The provision to which the Senator has reference does not authorize the President to establish plants, to build Government plants, or to go into Government operation generally. It does provide the $2,000,000,000 for the purpose of making credit available to permit industry to expand plants for defense production, and for the operations of any such new agencies as may be set up. Now, here is what we have in mind——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to say a word further so as to finish my answer to the Senator's first question. Here is what we had in mind: During World War II authorization was given to establish corporations. I well remember our effort to build up a stockpile of critical and strategic materials prior to World War II. We were getting nowhere under the existing agencies and departments of the Government. True, we were building up the stockpile gradually, but very, very slowly. Finally, authorization was given to the President to set up corporations, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation went into the program of building up our stockpiles, and we made tremendous headway from that time until we became engaged in the war.

There were set up such corporations as the Defense Supplies Corporation and the Rubber Reserve Corporation, and, as I recall, one with respect to tin. We have some four or five, and perhaps the one which accomplished the most good so far as promoting the war productive capacity of the country was concerned with the Smaller War Plants Corporation.

We tried for a long time to operate through the existing agencies and departments of Government, and we tried in every way we could to develop a program whereby smaller business would have a chance to operate, to share this Government business, and to do its bit for our defense program. We got nowhere. About all they could hope for was to get some of the subcontracts, the crumbs from the table, until the Smaller War Plants Corporation was created. I believe one of the most successful corporations we had in the whole war was the Smaller War Plants Corporation. That is the kind of corporation which was contemplated under this provision, had it remained in the bill as the President requested.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I am sorry to say I do not think that is the kind of corporation the President contemplated at all, and I call to the Senator's attention the fact that powers given are "to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals." So the President can go "whole hog" into the mining business.

Subparagraph (C) of section 303 provides:

> The procurement power granted to the President by this action shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

In other words, it seems to me there is wide-open power to go into any business without any limitation whatever, except that it must be done to assist in carrying out the objectives of this act. That is broad enough so that the President can very easily make a finding and can at any time go into any business he chooses. In my opinion the issue is not whether it is a corporation or an agency—that does not make any difference to me—it is a matter of convenience, and one perhaps is better than the other. The Senator has referred to World War II. But the question is, Shall we in peacetime give the President the power to go into any business he chooses? That appears to me to be the issue that is raised by sections 303 and 304.

It seems to me that if the Government wants to go into business, it ought to tell us what that business is. If there is something which only the Government can do, or which it can do better than others, I am quite willing to give the Government authority to do it. But I object to broad, open power being given to the President to go into any business he chooses, particularly when he has already indicated his belief that if he thinks some industry is not expanding rapidly enough, or is not doing something he thinks it ought to do, then the Government ought to have the right to go into that business.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, of course I can say that I differ wholly and completely with the Senator from Ohio in his interpretation of what can be done under this provision. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee worked for a very long time in perfecting this proposed legislation. I believe that anyone who will read the committee report, particularly pages 18 and 19, will see a very clear statement as to what were the purposes we had in mind, the purposes which were stated to us in the testimony before the committee. I repeat that no provision contained in title III or in any other part of this bill gives the Government any sweeping or general authority to go into any business, buy any business, or operate any business. This is a program that is completely parallel with and similar to the program we used so well to make ourselves ready and able to carry on and to do the magnificent job we did all through World War II.

Mr. DOUGLAS and Mr. SCHOEPPEL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that in this period, which is certainly not a period of peace, whatever else it may be, we may be in danger of a shortage of rubber and tin, as during World War II, and that there is need therefore to make large purchases of natural rubber and tin, not merely for stockpiling, but for current use?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator from Illinois is absolutely correct. As a matter of fact, we know that we would feel much better if we had a much larger stockpile of natural rubber than we have now. We have continued the operation of some of the synthetic rubber plants ever since the end of World War II, and even within recent weeks have opened several additional synthetic rubber plants. We of course never released control over tin following World War II. I cite that to show that we have actually exercised some of these powers continuously, even since the end of World War II. We know that if the time comes when we must go into an all-out mobilization, we are going to need a great many more of the critical and strategic materials, of which we do not have a sufficient supply today.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not also true that we are rapidly approaching the bottom of the barrel so far as high-grade iron ore resources are concerned, particularly those on the Mesabi Range, and that it will be necessary for us either to get high-grade iron ore from Labrador or Venezuela and bring it in my boat, or to develop the taconite process, or low grade ore on the Mesabi Range. If that is used, the process will require capital investment on the range itself, and will need an investment of capital which the big steel companies do not want to make, but which in the national interest should be made, in order that the objective may be realized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think the Senator is entirely correct. I remember that in the early days, before we got into World War II, high officials of some of our large producing companies made statements, which apparently were completely conclusive, that we did not need additional plant capacity in their particular line. That was true with reference to steel; it was true with reference to aluminum; it was true with reference to many of the things of which we needed a great expansion before we got very far into the war program. Certainly we may expect that situation to occur again.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL rose.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I shall yield to the Senator from Kansas in just a moment, if he will permit me to finish this statement.

I remember that during World War II we were cut off from South American bauxite deposits by reason of submarine operations in the Gulf of Mexico. There was a time when not a single shipload of bauxite could get through from South American ports to our Gulf ports because of submarine activity, and we were thrown back upon our own bauxite resources in this country. We were told at that time that if we continued the then rate of production of aluminum, relying solely upon our own bauxite resources, and did not develop new methods of using low-grade bauxite, our entire supply would be exhausted in 18 months.

Mr. President, in time of war, in time of great national emergency, that is a very narrow margin upon which to operate.

I cite one further example. The week before last I heard a news report telling about the unloading of a shipload of manganese in this country. If there is one commodity which we desperately need, it is manganese. Where did that shipload of manganese come from? It came from Russia. Are we going to be dependent, in case of war, upon Russian manganese or upon manganese from a few countries behind the iron curtain?

Mr. President, I want to say that the time is late; it is later than many of us realize. The situation is more serious than many of us are willing to admit, and this is no time to be playing with half-way measures when it comes to authorizing the President to build up our stockpiles and our plant capacity where it may be needed in order to make us and keep us strong. That is all in the world that title III of this bill seeks to do.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I apreciate the fact that the members of the committee have given a great deal of study to this measure. Turning to the matter about which the senior Senator from Ohio was interrogating the Senator fram Alabama, is it the feeling of the members of the committee who worked on this measure and who are now submitting it to the Senate, that the President of the United States, under this bill, would establish new businesses, new enterprises, when there are already in existence businesses which might be able to do the required job?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say to the Senator from Kansas that I am glad he has asked that question. The answer, categorically, is "No, not at all." There is nothing in this bill which authorizes the Government of the United States to go into any kind of business except so far as the purchase of strategic and critical materials is concerned. In my opinion it does not give any general authority to the President to build new plants. During World War II the Government did build many war plants for all kinds of purposes, but there is no such general authority contained in this bill. It does authorize the Government to make loans to private enterprises to expand their plants and to do whatever may be necessary to enable them to do their share in making the Nation ready.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama that with that I heartily agree, and I think it is the attitude and the feeling of the members of the committee that so long as there are in this country companies, organizations, corporations, and associations, developed under our great free-enterprise system, which are capable of doing this job and have the capacity to do it, I am sure it must have been the intention of the members of the committee to see that such enterprises, typically American, shall have the right and the opportunity to furnish the material and the supplies which we so badly need now and which we shall need in the future if a greater degree of war activity should be necessary.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am in complete accord with the statement of the Senator, and I am sure he voices the sentiment of the entire membership of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the observation made by the Senator from Alabama, because if we are to take the background of this proposed legislation as it has been presented it will be helpful in the interpretation of what may or may not be done in the future. But I submit that section 303 goes beyond the limitations of section 302. In fact, on page 19 of the report, dealing with metals, minerals, and raw materials, it is suggested that it is the purpose to overcome these limitations.

I am in complete accord with the purpose of acquiring strategic materials. We have already provided authority for that through legislation, and I certainly would favor expanding that authority, but I ask the Senator, even though his interpretation of section 302 is what he has stated, how can he reconcile that with the second provision, in section 303 (a), which provides as follows:

> To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials—

And so forth. That goes beyond loans, does it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That amendment, the Senator may be interested to know, was placed in the bill on the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and I believe it was also suggested, or something similar to it was suggested, by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] and the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], who were particularly interested in taconite. Of course, the Senator knows that during World War II there was a similar program under which we subsidized—I do not know whether the Senator likes that term—mining and the development of our natural resources. It was felt that it was necessary to do that again. We are not exactly in a bad way, but certainly we are not in the best way in the world, with reference to iron ore. There is a great development of it in South America, in Venezuela. It is very fine, high-grade iron ore. It is contemplated that it will be mined and shipped across the Gulf of Mexico to the port of Mobile and on up to Birmingham and to eastern seaboard plants at Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. There is another great deposit in Labrador. But suppose we should encounter the same difficulty which we encountered in the last war, with ships being unable to get across the Gulf of Mexico. We may find ourselves in a very bad way with reference to such material.

I believe the Senator from Nebraska will agree that we should go into some kind of exploration, study, and research with reference to the development of taconite. This provision of the bill is written to authorize such things as that, and that is all.

Mr. WHERRY. If it were limited in that respect I would have no objection, and I think the categorical answer "no" to the question propounded by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would be correct with respect to this section. However, I submit to the distinguished Senator from Alabama that as I read subdivision 2 it would permit the very thing which the Senator from Ohio referred to. I am in total agreement with the objective of the Senator from Alabama regarding any strategic materials. I believe that if the need is shown and the material cannot be produced through the facilities which we have the Government ought to take steps to procure these critical and strategic materials and by purchase, if possible, accumulate them for our needs. However, that is an entirely different thing.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think the Senator will go further and say that the Government should help even in those cases where the cost of production is high because of the transportation distance or because of the high cost of production, or the low grade of the material.

Mr. WHERRY. That would depend on the basis of need. I think that situation could be brought about as has been presented by the able Senator. However, that does not answer my question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I suggest that that is exactly what subdivision 2 seeks to do. I cannot speak for the chairman of the committee or any other member of the committee, but, so far as I am concerned, if the Senator from Nebraska feels it needs clarifying language, for instance, to provide that it shall apply to "aid in the exploration" or "aid private enterprise in the exploration," or words to that effect, I would have no objection. Perhaps it might be a little objectionable if we said "aid private enterprise," because I think the Government would probably want to send its own men to make surveys and studies, and do some work and it should have the right to do so.

Mr. WHERRY. I would have no objection to such a provision, and I think clarifying language to carry out the intent of the committee would be helpful. To the extent that the Senator has gone thus far I cannot see how anyone could object to the objectives which he has outlined.

On the other hand, certainly, as I read the language, it is capable of being interpreted to mean that the Government could do the very thing that was suggested, namely, through development and producing the facilities, enter into competition with private enterprise.

I happen to have had something to do with steel when I was formerly on the Small Business Committee. I know that the situation of which the Senator speaks has come to pass. The steel companies are doing their very best to get procurements to enable them to go into Venezuela and other countries in order to obtain iron ore. Great plans are being made. However, I think this section would give the Government the same right in the case of steel as in the case of other strategic materials. For example, the Government could embark on the operation of steel plants, unless the provision is limited to the metals the Congress may want to specify by appropriate language, which will so clarify the meaning that it will be interpreted exactly as the Senator from Alabama is now advising the Senate.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can assure the Senator from Nebraska that that is what the Committee on Banking and Currency had generally in mind when it wrote this section.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe that in the report, at page 19, the committee attempts to set forth that fact. The broad language on page 19 indicates to me that we should go further. If necessary, I would want the committee to go further. However, how much further will the committee go? Will the materials which are strategic and the ones which the Government will acquire be mentioned by name, or does the provision open up all fields?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Senator will refer again to subdivision 2, he will note that it is limited to critical and strategic minerals and metals. Such metals and minerals represent a well-defined list. I do not think anyone could dispute the fact that we have a well-defined list of critical and strategic minerals and metals.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. While it is true that certain materials are listed as critical materials today, it is also true that these same materals may not be critical tomorrow. There are materials, no doubt, which are not being dreamed of as being critical by the standards of World War II, which may become critical very shortly. Subdivision 2, in the next paragraph, states:

> The purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling.

We would get into wool and cotton, which could become very critical before the war was over. It would include subsidies and other things.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We have those materials on hand.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We have domestic supplies, and they are subject to allocation.

Mr. WHERRY. That proves the point that I am trying to bring to the Senator's attention. I say while it is the intent of the distinguished Senator from Alabama to limit the application to strategic materials where the need for development is shown—and the Senator mentioned two particular minerals which he thought should be developed—in order to carry out the objective, if we interpret the language literally as it is written, it seems to me that it does not narrow the field to what the Senator from Alabama has so eloquently suggested to the Senate.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I think I am somewhat familiar with what was in the mind of the Senator from Wyoming when he suggested the language of subdivision 2. We have in this country a great many deposits of critical and strategic materials, but they are of such low grade that in ordinary times they cannot compete with the foreign production of such materials.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Manganese is an outstanding example.

Mr. MURRAY. We have tremendous deposits of manganese in Montana.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And graphite.

Mr. MURRAY. Ever since I have been in the Senate I have been aiding the manganese industry. During the last war, as well as during the First World War, we produced huge quantities of manganese under a system by which the Government, through price incentives, stimulated its production. I do not think the language can be susceptible to the inference that it is intended for the Government to set up corporations to carry on the development. I think it merely means that we will do what we did in the First World War and in the Second World War, namely, provide methods of inducing the owners of properties of that kind to develop them for purposes of war.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield so that I may ask the Senator from Montana a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall be glad to do so, with unanimous consent that I do not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska for that purpose?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall be glad to do so provided I do not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the legislative history which is being written here. Apparently intent is one thing, and interpretation is another. Let us take section 303 (a). It reads:

> SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale—

That would include everything.

Mr. MURRAY. I assume that refers to the purchase from foreign countries of these metals and minerals which we do not produce in this country.

Mr. WHERRY. It does not say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the point I am trying to make. I can see what the intent is. I am not quarreling too much with the objectives in mind, especially if it is a question of strategic materials. That would be one thing.

I again ask the distinguished Senator from Montana whether subdivision (1) is not capable of being interpreted to mean that the Government can purchase for use or for resale metals and minerals, raw materials and fuel, anything the Government wants to buy. Does it not cover the whole book?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I thought.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly we should have an understanding when the Senator says it gives the Government the right to purchase anything. First of all, we limit the power "to carrying out the objectives of this act." I think we should remember the legislative history of that provision permitting resale, because it has been included in every stockpiling law we have passed. There are some materials, as the able Senator from Nebraska well knows, which will deteriorate after so long a time so the very first time we passed a stockpiling law we gave the President the right to resell in order to rotate the fund, and keep the stockpiles built up.

Then there is another consideration. Some industry, some particular company, might run short of materials the Government might have on hand. For instance, it is conceivable that some steel manufacturing company might run short of manganese, and we felt it necessary that the Government have the right to sell to such a company when it became necessary. The language we are discussing is the same language we have had in our stockpiling laws from away back before the Second World War.

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator say this is the exact language?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No. I am not willing to say it is. I am certain it is very similar, if not identical.

Mr. WHERRY. The resale clause is in the bill, and I agree it should be in, because if materials which are likely to deteriorate can be sold, they should be sold. That still is not the answer to the question I have asked. I have not yet had time to study the bill, it came to my desk just this noon, with the report, and it might be that after studying and reading the report some of my questions might be cleared up. But no emergency has been declared, and I am apprehensive of establishing in time of peace the right of the Government to enter into business, in direct competition with private enterprise, on a wholesale basis, if that is what subdivisions (1) and (2) can be interpreted to mean.

Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the legislative history that is being made. Apparently subdivision (2) is intended only to apply to strategic materials which are in scarce supply. That is one thing. The distinguished Senator, for his example, referred to very scarce materials, and there is no objection on that score. But when we come to material which is not scarce, which might become a little scarce tomorrow, for instance, fuel oil, which is so important in a war, the answer might be different. Perhaps 6 months ago the supply was short; today it is in long supply. Perhaps the supply will get longer, perhaps it will be shorter. Is the proposal to permit the Government to get into the production and development of fuel oil?

I know the supply of manganese is very short. Probably we would not have the difficulty with manganese. If the language means only what the sponsors of the legislation say it means, that is one thing, but I submit that the language is capable of being interpreted to include, as I said to the Senator from Montana, everything in the book.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's concern about this question. The whole committee, I assure him, was just as greatly concerned, and if the Senator will read the hearings, he will find the questions which were propounded from time to time. If he will read the report he will see that we have tried to give the legislative background in such a way as to make it absolutely clear.

If the Senator from Nebraska will read the statement of policy he will see exactly what I mean. I refer the able Senator to the concluding sentence in the declaration of policy, on page 29 of the bill. This is an amendment which the committee itself added. It reads:

> It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use—

And listen to this language, which was added by the committee—> within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

In the particular paragraph of section 303 to which the Senator referred we again say that to carry out the objectives of this act the President shall do these things.

The able Senator has made reference to the fact that the report was placed on our desks just at noon today. The able Senator from Kansas referred to the same fact. We would have much preferred, if it had been possible, to have the report in the hands of every Senator for at least 24 hours before taking up the bill, but it simply was not possible to do that and to do the careful and thorough job which every Senator, when he reads the report, will discover has been done.

By the way, Mr. President, at this point I wish to pay my respects to the staff of our committee, to the legislative counsel, and to others who helped us through the hearings, through the formulation of the bill, and through the preparation of the report. I believe that during the time I have been a Member of the Senate I have never seen a report of a committee drawn with more care in order to make absolutely clear what was intended by the committee, and what was in the minds of the members of the committee with reference to the proposed legislation.

We have tried to set forth the legislative history just as fully as it was possible to do so in the relatively small number of pages used. That is the reason for the delay in Senators' getting the report. I feel confident that when the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Kansas, and other Senators have the opportunity to read the report, read the legislative background, and read the references made to the bill itself, each and every one will be satisfied that the intention of the committee was to do nothing more nor less than what the Senator from Nebraska stated he would have liked done.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. It is very difficult for me to ask my question without making an observation which I should like to make, but I would not want to be called down for violating the rule.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the able Senator from Nebraska be permitted to make his observation, provided I do not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Senator from Nebraska may proceed.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not mean to indicate, by any stretch of the imagination, that because the report was not on our desks before noon I was complaining.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understood that, but I desired to give this word of explanation, and to urge Senators, even at this late hour, to read the report before we come to a final vote on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the fact that the committee has done its level best to conduct all the hearings, hear the witnesses, and get the report out as quickly as possible, and I express my appreciation for the work done by the committee.

Mr. President, I merely made the observation that, in view of the fact that we had had the bill and report only since noon today, some of the questions we are asking, so far as the legislative history is concerned, might be cleared up if we had an opportunity to go into the bill and the report. But merely from a reading of the bill—and that is all we had before us until noon today—I have asked questions, because I feel it is important to do so in making this legislative history, so I may know exactly what was intended by the bill and what the committee had in mind.

The Senator is a member of the Small Business Committee. I hope his experience on that committee in the future will intensify his desire to protect the competitive enterprise system. It is one thing to subsidize and to permit the Government to purchase the materials in question. It is another thing to protect the competitive industry of the country, while everything is done to accomplish what is necessary to be accomplished. The legislative history being made today certainly will clear up many points in connection with the interpretation of the section.

Naturally, as one who believes in the competitive enterprise system, as I know many other Senators do, I think these questions are very proper to be asked at this time. Possibly a reading of the report and also of the hearings will give us knowledge as to the intention of the members of the committee. I feel at this point that, while we have had a very satisfactory explanation by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] and by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], yet the provisions are quite broad, and it may be helpful if we can at least add some clarifying language, at least to satisfy some of us who are apprehensive about the situation, to show that it is not the intention of the Government to go into business in competition with private enterprise all the way along the line, but merely so that the necessary facilities can be obtained, and that purchases and sales can be made to accomplish the necessary results, but that the intent is that in the acquirement of the strategic materials we shall follow the course that was established in the world war, and confine the Government's activities to the strategic materials necessary to the national defense, to supply the machinery necessary to be supplied in time of war as well as obtaining enough of such materials to take care of civilian requirements.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall yield to the Senator from Louisiana in 1 minute.

I may say to the able Senator from Nebraska that I appreciate the concern on his part which prompted his question. I did not intend to indicate by what I said that I was at all restive under his questioning. His questions were wholly proper. I am glad to answer them. They gave me the opportunity to make statements as to the position of the committee. The able chairman of the committee was not on the floor when the colloquy began, but I think he would agree with the statements I made.

I believe that when the report is read and when the bill is studied in the light of the report, all Senators will realize that a most careful job has been done.

By the way, Mr. President, in this connection, I should like to refer to the chairman of the committee who made the opening statement on the bill. He gave us a very clear statement regarding it and answered the questions of many Senators. I want to pay my compliments to the chairman of the committee for the excellent job he did in framing the legislation. It was a difficult piece of legislation to handle in the hearings, in the committee, in the drafting of the bill, and in the preparation of the report. The chairman of the committee, the able Senator from South Carolina, did such a magnificent job—I am sure every member of the committee will agree—that when the bill finally came up for final report the vote on it was 13 to 0—a unanimous vote in favor of reporting the bill.

I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama for the fine presentation and explanation he is making of certain sections of the bill.

One question arose in my mind in connection with the section which is now under discussion. I wonder if the Senator from Alabama has given any consideration as to whether section 303, in giving the President the power to make provision for the exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and materials, might give the President the right—which I do not believe he presently possesses—to develop or to lease the tidelands, which are so much in controversy at the present time between certain coastal States and the Central Government?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the able Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of our committee, may be allowed to answer that question, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, first I desire to thank the Senator from Alabama for the very kind remarks he made about me. I am certain I do not deserve them. I want to say to my friend the Senator from Louisiana——

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator from South Carolina please raise his voice a trifle? It is difficult for us on the other side of the aisle to hear, especially when the Senator turns around to address another Senator who stands farther away from us.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana, who has raised a question as to tidelands oil, a subject which has been debated on many occasions in the Senate, and which has been voted upon, and with respect to which many southern States have adopted resolutions, and even passed bills, that there was never the slightest thought on the part of the committee that the tidelands oil, which raises a debatable and argumentative question, should be involved in this bill. That was my understanding, and that I believe was the understanding of the administration, which wants to have the pending bill passed as soon as possible.

I assure the Senator from Louisiana that so far as I am concerned—other members of the committee can speak for themselves—I certainly never conceived of the idea that the tidelands oil would be taken over by the Government, especially after so much debate has been had upon the subject in the Senate, and after so many votes have been taken on it, and after the Supreme Court decisions have been rendered with respect to the subject, and after resolutions have been adopted and laws passed by various States.

I merely wanted the RECORD to show that there was no thought of that. I understand how the Senator from Louisiana feels about the subject, because so many ghosts have been raised in connection with the bill that some might be led to believe the Federal Government was going to take over everything. All we want to do by this bill is to control strategic materials and products necessary to the national defense, to the end that we can defend ourselves.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. It is my understanding that there have been opinions by the Attorney General to the effect that the Federal Government does not at this time have the authority to lease or develop the tidelands without authority from Congress. I wanted it understood, if the Senator sees it that way, that it is not the intention of the language in question to confer upon the President or the Government the authority to lease the tidelands or to develop them?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I endorse the statement made by the able chairman of the committee that certainly there was not in the mind of the committee—in fact, I dare say not in the mind of any single member of the committee—any thought of anything in this bill having to do at all with the highly controversial tideland-oil question.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In order that a case may be presented to the Senator to which an answer can be given so as to make the record more clear, I wish to present the following: In the event that fuel should become short—and during the last war there was a question of subsidizing stripper wells, and so forth, and so on, as the Senator recalls—would section 303, as expanded, permit the Government to prospect for oil or dig oil wells, and to acquire fuel oil, if the Government felt that it was in the interest of national defense to do so?

Mr. SPARKMAN. My own feeling is that there is nothing in clause (2), the clause to which the Senator has referred, that would permit the handling of anything having to do with oil. It is restricted to minerals, critical and strategic minerals, and metals. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in clause (1) the President is authorized, under certain conditions, to purchase fuel oil. I want to be certain the Senator did not overlook that.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. But that has to do with purchases. That has nothing to do with development.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am talking about facilities, and the use of facilities. Is there anything in any section that would permit the Government to prospect for oil or drill for oil?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not at all. I repeat there is nothing in any section that would authorize the Federal Government generally to build anything or to develop or operate anything.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator feel that clause (1) or clause (2) of section 303, under subsection (a) provide authority for the Government to go into the production of steel in the event of war?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Steel?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Once more I say: Nothing in this bill authorizes the Government generally to go into the production of anything. What the committee had chiefly in mind with respect to the program contemplated under section 302, was the making of loans to a private steel company, for instance, to enable it to expand its plant capacity.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. We have been talking about section 303. Let us now return to section 302, which is the loan section. I think I understand the Senator correctly in what he has said. His interpretation is that there is no provision in section 303, subsection (a), clauses (1) and (2) that provides for the building of facilities by the Government in direct competition with private enterprise, to produce oil or to produce steel, and, therefore, we could say, a lot of other material?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a further question. Does section 302 or any other section provide that the Government can loan money to a new corporation and set it up in direct competition with businesses already in operation in the fields I have just mentioned; or in order to get materials to businesses already in operation, if they needed the materials, would the policy be to keep them at such a price that a subsidy would be required?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me call attention to the exact language of section 302:

> To expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts for the procurement of materials for the national defense.

So there the three things I have mentioned are tied in, namely, first, "to expedite production and deliveries"; second, "under Government contracts"; and third, "for the procurement of materials for the national defense."

Then we find the following:

> The President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials.

It seems to me the language is very clear, Mr. President.

Mr. WHERRY and Mr. FERGUSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska, in order to permit him to finish his questions.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Let me ask this question, please: Does this provision mean the expansion of a particular plant or the expansion of the entire industry in order to provide the material?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say that in my opinion—although I do not recall that this point was specifically brought out in the committee—it would not necessarily be limited to existing companies.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the point.

Mr. SPARKMAN. For instance, the Senator from Nebraska will remember that in World War II it was necessary to bring in new producers. For instance, off-hand I think of the expansion of the aluminum industry. The Reynolds Co. had never produced aluminum; it had been a fabricator of aluminum products. But under the Defense Act, the Reyonlds Co. obtained a loan from the RFC, and built a plant for the conversion of bauxite into ingot aluminum.

Similarly, the Kaiser Co. engaged in steel production; and there were many other similar concerns, which the Senator from Nebraska can recall very quickly, I am sure.

Certainly it seems to me that in instances where a new producer came into the field, and where new production in that field was needed, the President would be empowered, under this section, to make such loans.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this time?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The distinguished Senator from Alabama indicated that there is nothing whatever in the bill which will permit the United States Government to enter into the production of equipment or the manufacture of goods. Is there anything in this measure which would permit the Government to form corporations similar to the RFC or corporations to which the Government might make such loans, and thus indirectly, through a Government corporation, go into the manufacturing and the production business?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I say to the able Senator from Michigan that no such provision is included in the bill. In the bill as originally requested there was a suggested provision to authorize the President to set up Government corporations to do certain things—for instance, to engage in the purchase of strategic and critical materials and to engage in such functions as those which were performed by the Defense Supplies Corporation, the Rubber Reserve Company, the Smaller War Plants Corporation, and similar organizations during the Second World War.

We discussed this matter a little earlier.

The committee struck out the authorization for the creation of Government corporations, and nowhere in the bill is there any provision whereby the Government, either itself or through any agency or corporation, can operate any business.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I recall that the distinguished Senator indicated that in the preamble to the bill there is language to the effect that all the powers conferred by the bill itself are to be under the American system of competitive enterprise. Does the Senator believe that is a restriction on the President, so that he must act under it; or is it only preamble language which is advisory?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course it is in the declaration of policy, and the Senator from Michigan well knows the effect of a declaration of policy.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is really the preamble, is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that all the way through the bill are to be found statements of "in keeping with the objectives of this act." The bill constantly refers to that expression. I say that certainly it was the intention of the Banking and Currency Committee that that should be controlling upon every part of this proposed legislation.

Mr. FERGUSON. In effect, it really is a limitation; is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Senator from Michigan wishes to speak of it as a limitation, he may do so, of course. I think it is a directive.

In other words, I do not admit for a moment that had we omitted that statement, there would have been any provision of power to do otherwise. It is a further expression of our intention.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does it make any difference whether it is in or is not in the bill, so far as it affects the President's power?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly it is a further expression of our intent. All the way through the bill we refer to the objectives of the act, and we certainly intend that that shall be the spirit in which the act is administered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Then if this matter ever reached a court, the court would take this language as being indicative of the desire of Congress; and in construing the act, the court should take that into consideration and should give it effect. Is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly think the Senator is correct in making that statement.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would not the fears of the Senator from Michigan be somewhat allayed if he would consult section 302, particularly the language the eminent Senator from Alabama has read in lines 5 to 9, namely, that the loans which are to be authorized under section 302 may also be made "so private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity," and so forth. So no Government corporation could be construed to be a private enterprise; and therefore no Government corporation could receive such loans, but only the normal, private enterprises would be eligible to receive them. Is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course, the Senator from Illinois is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator; but I wish to make sure whether there is any provision in any other part of the bill which will confer such power.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to take so much time in discussing this subject, of course.

At this point let me read something in answer to a discussion with reference to the stock-piling provision, had a few minutes ago, between the able Senator from Nebraska and myself. The language which I shall now read is not identical with the language included in the portion of a bill to which we have been referring, but I wish to read the provision made for the RFC, to permit it to purchase such materials.

After reading it, I shall let the Senator judge which is broader. Personally, I think the language of the provision for the RFC is broader than the language used in the bill now before us for consideration.

I read the following:

When requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President, to create or organize a corporation or corporations with power (a) to produce and acquire and carry strategic and critical materials, as defined by the President; (b) to purchase and lease land, to purchase, lease, build, and expand plants, and to purchase and produce equipment, supplies, and machinery for the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war; (c) to lease such plants to private corporations to engage in such manufacture; and (d), if the President finds it is necessary for a Government agency to engage in such manufacture, to engage in such manufacture itself—

And so forth. So I think the Senator from Nebraska will agree that we certainly have cut down on the broad authorization which was given in the legislation enacted by the Seventy-sixth Congress, authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to engage in these activities.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the Senator having read that language into the RECORD at this point.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, reference has been made here several times to our not being engaged in war. The date of the act from which I just read was June 25, 1940, which was 18 months before we got into World War II.

Mr. WHERRY. If I may make a further observation relative to the language of the pending bill, while the language provides that Government agencies or corporations shall do thus and so, that in reality is authorized under the existing law, is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Does the Senator refer to the RFC?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The RFC was authorized to do anything during World War II. It could set up a corporation. It could go out and build a plant. The Defense Plant Corporation did that. It built plants all over the country.

Mr. WHERRY. That is a broader section than 303, the one we have here, is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is much broader. None of that can be done under this act. All the Government can do here is to make loans to private industry with which to expand plant capacity.

Mr. WHERRY. That is section 302, is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is section 302.

Mr. WHERRY. What about section 303?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Under section 303 the President is given power to buy critical and strategic materials.

Mr. WHERRY. And to develop and supply, and so forth, and so on?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I say, I should be very glad to interpolate the language, "to aid in the development, exploration," and so forth, with the idea of subsidizing those particular critical and strategic materials.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a question, and in doing so I feel I should apologize. I heard the Senator discuss what I am going to ask him about, but I was called out of the Chamber several times and I did not get the continuity of it. What does the pending bill provide so far as activating the production of strategic minerals in this country is concerned?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is the very section we have been talking about. It is found in section 303 (a), in subparagraph 2, and if the Senator will refer to that page, which is page 35, line 18, he will find that the committee included the substance of the amendment which was offered by the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. MILLIKIN. Are there any standards specified for determining which mine, for example, may receive assistance? Is the whole subject delegated to the enforcing authority, under this bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The power is given to the President to aid in the supplying and production of critical and strategic materials which may be needed in the defense effort.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Has the committee in its report suggested any standards or any desire or wish of its own?

Mr. SPARKMAN. We did not provide any standards. We assumed, and I believe the report will bear me out, that it would be applied to the high-cost-of-production mine, the marginal mine, particularly, in the field of critical and stratgic materials, of which we do not have a plentiful supply. I mentioned, as an example a few moments ago, manganese bauxite, graphite, mica, and chrome, which are some of the particular critical and strategic materials I think would be covered. Another one I mentioned was taconite, which is needed to augment our diminishing iron-ore supply.

Mr. MILLIKIN. How about copper?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If we were in short supply of copper, if there were high-cost-of-production mines, marginal mines that needed to be brought into operation in order to help boost our copper supply, I certainly think the President would be empowered under this bill to do it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If we are dependent on foreign sources in an important part of our copper supply and if the importation of copper from those foreign sources could be interfered with as those importations from those sources were interfered with in World War II, is it the thought of the committee that the President should take steps to stimulate the domestic production of such minerals?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. I discussed that a few moments ago. I made reference to the fact that during World War II some of our foreign sources of supply were cut off from us. I mentioned particularly bauxite, as to which we were in a state of high dependence. Our bauxite generally came to us from South America. During World War II, submarines invaded the Gulf of Meixco to such an extent that for weeks, and I may say even for months, not a single shipload of bauxite was able to get through. We were confronted with a very serious problem. My own personal feeling is that the President, or someone else—whoever controls our stockpiling of critical and strategic materials—ought to have the power to build up that stockpile any time it may require building up. Personally, in respect to many different materials, I should like to see it build up far beyond what it is today.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It has been the policy of the administration, in connection with various mining-aid bills which have been before us, that Federal aid should be given only to those mines which, with that aid, could compete with foreign mines. Is there anything in the pending bill which lends strength to that theory, or which takes away from that theory, or which changes that theory in any way?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not believe there is anything in this bill which applies any limitation upon the President in the use of the power. The sole language is set forth in the provision which I cited to the Senator a moment ago. I may supplement what I said a moment ago about building up our stockpile of critical and strategic materials. We should try to build it up. I mentioned developing the sources in this country for the production of strategic materials and minerals, where such production is advisable.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will not the Senator say it is very bad policy, in the middle of a situation which might go into world war III, to omit any step which would increase our domestic production of critical and strategic minerals?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I want to see no step omitted that would make us as nearly self-sufficient as we can be. To that end I believe, under the language of this bill, we leave it wide open to the President to use all the powers granted to such degree as he may think necessary.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I may say to the distinguished Senator that that is what causes me some concern, because it has been the policy of the administration not to build up our domestic supplies, particularly those of the smaller mines, but to put dependence on foreign sources. It may be that that policy is changed, since we have gotten into this difficulty. Personally, I should like to see it changed by mandate of law rather than dependence on the policy of an administration which, in my view of it, has been entirely wrong, and which does not fit the condition in which we find ourselves.

As I said a while ago, I may say again, to the distinguished Senator, the policy has been to help the big mine and the big company, which, with that help, could compete successfully with the foreign country. That does not meet the situation. It is necessary to open up the small mines and the middling mines that are completely closed out at the present time in this country. We, I suggest, must put our sources of strategic mineral materials beyond the reach of the snorkel submarine, if we are planning anything that has sense in it; and I am sorry that there is not some spell-out here in the bill of that kind of policy.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say to the able Senator from Colorado that he, of course, remembers that the Senate passed some such bill as the one to which he refers, during the present Congress, as I recall.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That adds to my apprehension, I may say to the distinguished Senators, because, by administration order, that bill was put on the ice in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was just going to complete my statement by saying——

Mr. MILLIKIN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is all right. I was going to say not exactly the same thing the Senator has said. I do not know whether it was by administration order, but the bill has not cleared the House, so that in the committee bill we were doing as much as we could hope to get out of both Houses of Congress by placing this broad language in the bill. I am a strong believer in the very policy the Senator has just enunciated. I supported his measure in the Senate. I believe we should do everything possible to develop our own resources and make this Nation as nearly self-sufficient as it can be made.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I thought I was making my plea to a sympathetic Senator, and I am very much interested in the answers he has given. I wish the committee had spelled out with a little more particularity the policies which were to be followed, because I fear that this language will simply put us under the same fruitless policies which have existed for a long time. During three wars in 30 years this country has been subject to the ore supplies and strategic minerals of foreign countries. I wonder how long it will take us to learn. How many wars must we have before we get sense enough into our thick heads to make this country dependent on itself, if that be possible, for having a supply of domestically produced strategic minerals?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say to the Senator that it is my understanding that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House offered an amendment to the bill which is being considered there which is substantially the same as our bill, and included in it was the same language with reference to the exploration and development of mines. The House has, within the last few minutes, passed the bill. I assume that provision is still in it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The same provision which is in the Senate bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is my understanding.

I would personally gladly go all the way with the Senator from Colorado in trying to establish some plan whereby greater impetus can be given to the development of the natural resources of this country toward the objective of making the Nation as nearly self-sufficient as it can be made.

A few moments ago, before the Senator from Colorado came to the floor, I referred to the fact that one of the things we need most is manganese. It is one of the things of which we have the least. How ironic it seems to have read in the newspapers a week or two ago that a shipload of manganese had arrived in this country. From where? From Soviet Russia. Manganese is one of the most essential products in our stockpile, particularly if war should come. Yet we are to a considerable extent dependent upon Russia for our manganese.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is even more ironical while receiving a boatload of something we need to receive a boatload of Russian furs which we do not need and which are putting out of business our own fur farmers.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I think I am perfectly safe in saying that furs are not included in this bill, I am glad to say.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take so much time. There are a few other points I desire to mention. We have gone pretty well through a discussion of the first three titles. The fourth title has to do with the control of credit. The committee rewrote a great portion of that title. We reinserted in large part, regulation W, giving the Federal Reserve Board the right to control consumer credit in installment buying.

Then the question of real-estate credit came up, and the committee was not willing to go along on giving the President or the Federal Reserve Board or anyone else the right to control real-estate credit, but it decided that the part of real-estate credit which was the most inflationary should be subject to control. That is where new construction is involved. We gave the Federal Reserve Board the right to control real-estate credit on new construction of the conventional type, privately financed. Then we gave to the President exactly the same power with reference to the control of real-estate credit on all Government-aided construction, such as FHA, the VA housing program, the farm housing program, and public housing. This authority over Government financing aids includes controls over all new credit, whether new construction or not.

It was our thought and intention that the program should be administered somewhat parallel to and on the same basis. My own personal view is that we should have gone one step further. I do not argue that we should have given anyone the right to say whether a person could sell his farm or his home at whatever price he wished to charge, but it seems to me that if there are deferred payments involved, installment sales, or purchases, the Federal Reserve Board should have the same control over them as it has over consumer credit under regulation W. However, the majority of the committee felt that that was not necessary because it involved capital assets and did not involve the production of any new assets. For that reason the majority of the committee was unwilling to grant those controls.

I may say that there is no control on the sale or purchase of real estate.

In the bill which came to us originally there was a provision to give the President or the Secretary of Agriculture the right to increase margins for the control of speculative trading on commodity markets. The committee struck out that provision. I think there may be a great deal of misunderstanding as to the reason why the committee struck it out, and for that reason I want to say a word or two with reference to it.

In the opinion of the committee, the only thing sought was to establish a plan of increasing margins, and apparently that increase would be across the board, regardless of whether the buying was purely speculative or whether it was in connection with the legitimate buying and selling of commodities on the commodity market. It was my feeling, and I think it perhaps may have been the feeling of other members of the committee, that by a uniform increase in the required margins it would be the little fellow who would be hurt, whereas the big operators would be allowed to continue.

Let me cite the example of cotton, Mr. President, because that happens to be the thing with which I am most familiar. Today the required margin on cotton is $30 a bale. In my home town of Huntsville, Ala., there are probably 12 or 15 cotton merchants. By and large, they are local persons. There may be some young man who has become a cotton merchant, just as one would enter the grocery business. He operates on a limited amount of capital. Every time he buys a bale of cotton from a farmer, in order to protect himself he must sell a bale of cotton on the board and he must hedge the purchase. Vice versa, every time he sells a bale of cotton he must buy one in order to protect himself on that particular bale of cotton. That means that he must put up $30 of his own money. He is limited in his amount of capital, yet he is the only outlet in that town the farmers have for the sale of their cotton.

I might cite as an example the firm of Anderson, Clayton & Co., the largest cotton dealers in the country. I suppose it would not amount to a great deal to them if the margin should be increased to $50 a bale rather than $30. They could keep right on operating. But I can think of any number of small cotton merchants who actually furnish a market for the farmers in my home town and in other towns who simply could not operate in such a situation. They do not go on the market and simply buy and sell for speculative purposes; they buy and sell for hedging.

Witnesses before the committee stated that there should be better control of this speculative buying and selling on the market. However, the committee felt that, whereas a mere increase in margins might tighten up on speculative buying and selling, the real impact would fall on the little fellow with limited capital who was furnishing the real outlet for the sale of cotton at the level where the farmer is disposing of his cotton. I assume the same condition would prevail with reference to wheat, barley, rye, and some other agricultural products.

The committee felt it was a matter which required careful and considerable study by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which has jurisdiction over the Commodity Exchange Act. While we recognized that there ought to be a tightening of controls we felt it would go into and perhaps involve a rewriting of the Commodity Exchange Act. At one time we thought simply of turning the section over to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and asking them to report on it, but it was felt that to do so would delay the whole bill.

Another section provided for the disposal of surplus farm products by the Commodity Credit Corporation. We struck out that section. Apparently there was no urging or support for it, since under section 407 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1949 we felt that adequate authority is given to the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of the surplus farm products under a plan which is as good and perhaps even more favorable to the Government than what was proposed in the bill. Therefore we eliminated that section.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the testimony which was taken before the committee show any evidence of speculation since the Korean outbreak started?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say that we had an exhibit sent up by the Secretary of Agriculture after the hearings closed, which showed considerable activity on the various commodity markets, of which a great part was purely speculative. When it comes to deciding the question of what effect it has on prices, and so forth, I must admit I am not a capable judge. As a matter of fact, I may say that a few years ago the Joint Committee on the Economic Report appointed a subcommittee to go into the question, with the idea of doing something like that suggested. The subcommittee studied the matter at great length and submitted a report—I do not know whether it was justified—to the effect that speculative buying and selling was essential in order that hedges would be available, and that the evidence did not demonstrate that speculative buying and selling caused inflationary pressures or fluctuations in the market.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. A few days ago I saw a report to the effect that approximately 2 weeks after the outbreak of fighting in Korea lard had risen 40 percent in price. In 2 weeks time there could not be any justification for that rise. It seems to me that perhaps it was one of the outstanding examples of an increase overnight to an inflationary price. I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that in the event these runaway prices are not stopped, or there is a considerable amount of speculation at the expense of the defense effort, I sincerely hope the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which I am a member, will do something about it. So far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, I do not understand how any patriotic American—and I say "patriotic" advisedly—at a time when our boys are being called upon to do what they are doing in Korea, for our safety and security, namely, to give their lives if necessary, can make a profit or become a profiteer, or deliberately and with design speculate for the purpose of making money.

So far as I am concerned I want to say that when the time comes that we must have legislation to stop profiteering and speculating at the expense of the defense effort I am willing to go down the line for any type and kind of rigid legislation which is necessary to put a stop to it, even to the extent of including a criminal penalty. Profiteering and hoarding in war, at the expense of someone else, and creating inflationary pressure, when it is absolutely unnecessary and unpatriotic to do so, ought to receive the considered attention of the Congress of the United States, if it is not stopped.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say that I agree completely with the statement of the able Senator from Illinois. I was simply bringing out the point that legislation of the kind referred to requires much more careful study than we would be able to give to it and get a bill on the floor of the Senate for early consideration. I shall come back to this point later, but I may say that, as the Senator knows, we included in this bill a price control provision whereby it may very well be possible to control some of the things to which he has referred.

Furthermore, the early part of the bill contains a provision which I should not like to have overlooked. In it we provide criminal penalties for people who hoard, or engage in black markets or excessive profiteering. Just how effective the enforcement of such criminal penalties would be, I do not know. Certainly it was the intention and feeling of the committee that what the able Senator from Illinois has stated is absolutely right. To engage in such practices at a time when we are asking our young men to make the supreme sacrifice, if need be, is not only silly but unpatriotic.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I call attention to amendment B offered by the chairman of the committee, which has to do with the "processing of cattle and calves, lambs and sheep, and hogs, the processing of each species being separately considered," and so forth. I do not know why the amendment was separately offered unless it was because the bill had been written before the amendment was drawn up. If the amendment should be adopted, does the Senator know whether it would be invoked soon?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no information on that point. I think I know the reason for the amendment. I again fall back on cotton, which happens to be the commodity with which I am most familiar. It may apply to other commodities. To some commodities it would not apply. The Senator knows that the cotton markets started up just a short time prior to the outbreak of the war. On June 15, cotton was selling at 29 cents a pound. At about the time of the Korean outbreak, or a few days thereafter, the Government estimate on cotton acreage was issued. It was the second lowest in the history of the United States. Of course everyone knew then that we would have a short crop. People started estimating the crop at some ten and a half million or ten and a quarter million bales. It was known that it would be an unusually short cotton crop. As a result within 30 days' time cotton had gone up to 39 cents a pound. That was not the result of the Korean outbreak, but was due to an expected short crop.

Just day before yesterday the cotton estimate was announced. As had been predicted, it was 10,308,000 bales, if I remember correctly, as against 16,000,000 bales produced last year. Ten million three hundred and eight thousand bales is not much more than what we will consume in this country ourselves, and usually we sell three or three and one-half million bales abroad. Cotton is one of the most essential war products. So it can be seen what pressures have pushed the price of cotton up.

The mills buy their cotton, manufacture their gray goods, and make their commitments some 6 months ahead of time. They are selling goods now, and have been for some time, on the basis of the present cost of cotton, around 37 or 37½ cents. I have not seen the market report in the last day or two, but some of the cotton going into goods right now costs the mills more than 39 cents.

Mr. President, I use cotton as an example. The Senator from Nebraska, I think, was primarily concerned with meat. I assume the same reflections would apply to meat.

Digressing just a little, it is my understanding that the price the farmer gets for steers on the hoof has actually gone down since June 15. I am not sure of that, but someone told the committee that.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am interested in cotton, just as is the Senator, but now cattle feeders are putting their fall and winter requirements into the feed lots—hogs, lambs, and cattle. Of course, the price to be received is one thing which determines whether or not they buy them, and feed them the corn which adds to their value. What I should like to know is whether there was before the committee any evidence of which the Senator knows which would warrant the invoking of this amendment, which I have no doubt would be agreed to, in the event the bill were passed. Does the Senator know of any such evidence? If there is any, I should like to know about it, and if that evidence revealed that a roll-back might be instituted, could he tell us what the date of that roll-back might be? There are thousands of feeders who would be intensely interested in what the Senate does with this particular amendment, whether it is written into the bill, and whether or not it is to be invoked.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I am not sure that I follow the Senator from Nebraska. Is he referring to amendment B?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It seems to me the purpose of the amendment is to protect the feeder, the processor.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. That is exactly what was done in the last world war. But the processor did not refer back to the feeder the subsidy it was intended the feeder should get. If the proposed levels are established clear across the board, that is one thing, but it would be different if they are established only at the processing level.

During the last world war the subsidy never reached the producer, but I am not discussing that feature. I doubt if it could be handled differently in this bill. What I should like to know is whether the Senator recalls any testimony in the hearings showing that, if this amendment shall be agreed to, the administration or the powers that be would invoke this requirement, so that I might have the information to relay to those interested in the feed lots today. The roll-back would be tremendously important to them.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I call attention to the fact that the bill does not carry any subsidy. There are no subsidy payments authorized in the proposed legislation.

Mr. WHERRY. The bill would not authorize them?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not at all. It provides for ceilings, but not for subsidies.

Mr. WHERRY. How could the Government regulate the processing tax on the processing level unless there were subsidies, unless there were a date that was satisfactory, when the provisions as to cattle were comparable to those applicable to everything else involved in the economy?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina, be allowed to answer the question without my losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. The amendment we are discussing is one similar to that known as the Barkley-Bates amendment, of 1942, as I told the Senator from Nebraska this morning. The amendment as it sounds merely makes provision so that the processors of cattle, lambs, beef, hogs, or whatever it might be, will be in a reasonable position, insofar as the margin of profit is concerned. That was the amendment which the then Senator Barkley offered in 1942. I went back into the law of 1942 with Mr. Boots, the legislative counsel, this morning. The provision is found on page 40 of the Price Control Act, as amended, which covers the subject very fully. I should be glad to give it to the Senator from Alabama or the Senator from Nebraska, or I should be glad to read it myself.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Is there any evidence in the hearings, or any evidence about which the Senator knows, which warrants this amendment, and does the Senator feel that the evidence that was adduced would require the invoking of the amendment this fall if it were enacted?

Mr. MAYBANK. I would not say there was. But we tried to take care of what war powers were given in World War II. We had the staff check the different war powers acts. The Vice President, then Senator from Kentucky, called my attention to the matter, and I met with several persons from the section represented by the Senator from Nebraska who were in the city, who suggested that they should be protected as they were in 1942, as we try to do in the bill as to others. So I offered the amendment, to be brought up in connection with the bill. At the time it is brought up, perhaps it could be amended to answer the Senator's question.

It was rather hazy in my mind as to what we did in 1942 and 1943, and I asked Mr. Boots, the legislative counsel, who has been with us day and night on this bill, to get the old records, and we checked into the matter this morning. That is the reason for the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, let me add one further word. I have the language of the former act before me, and it is almost identical with that of the bill. It covers the same plan we had during World War II, which allowed adjustments from time to time.

I believe I understand the import of the question of the Senator from Nebraska, and I will say, No, there was no evidence before the committee to the effect that it would be necessary to invoke any price ceilings on the particular commodity he mentions, at any particular time. Of course, the committee in mentioning the June 15 date, in effect, or expressing its desire that producers will not allow prices to get much out of line with the prices prevailing on that date.

Bear in mind that all the controls provided for in the bill are wholly permissive, at the President's discretion, and the purpose of the amendment is simply to provide that if and when such controls shall be found necessary for one line of commodities, then this procedure shall be followed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, there were no requests to be heard from the so-called processors or cattle raisers. I received some letters asking for hearings if and when the regulations were put into effect, from those who believed the matter might be handled by regulation rather than by law. We assured some of the writers that when the President proceeds to act under the permissive controls, wholesalers, retailers, abattoirs, and the like, would be called in, when the permissive controls were considered. That is why they were not heard.

I remind the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] brought the situation as to cattle and hides, and kindred subjects, to our attention all through the hearings. He was pretty well versed on that matter as a result of contacts with some hide manufacturers and abattoirs in Virginia.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I understood the wording of the statute, and I knew then and know now how it operates. But that is not my question. I have today received telegrams and letters from persons who wish to know whether any of these regulations might be put into effect this fall. If the regulations should go into effect this fall it would have an effect upon the ceiling under which a farmer buys his feeder cattle. We would not want to interfere with that situation if it is not necessary to do so. Was there any evidence adduced in the hearings that the regulations might be put into effect this fall? That is something which may be very important. The answer of the Senator from Alabama is that there is no such evidence now.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, that is the answer, at least so far as I know.

Mr. WHERRY. I deeply appreciate that. While I feel it might be written into the statute as a discretionary power when and if we might need it, perhaps next year, it is certainly desirable to give to those who put lambs and hogs and steers into their feed lots the information that while discretionary power may be granted later, there is no evidence at this time that warrants such a ceiling being placed upon the processors, which in turn would affect the producers.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish to make an announcement. I have just talked to the distinguished majority leader of the House of Representatives, Representative MCCORMACK, and he advises me that the House has just passed the defense production bill, a bill such as that we are considering now. I hope that will furnish a stimulus to the Senate to move as rapidly as possible with the bill which is now pending.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I may say in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Illinois it is also my understanding that the bill as passed by the House is in substantially the same form as the bill the Senate committee reported.

Mr. LUCAS. I believe the Senator from Alabama is correct in that statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, it is rather unfortunate that a bill so important and so far reaching as Senate bill 3936 should have to be considered when so many Members of the Senate are tied up in conferences and committee hearings.

Tomorrow, as soon as I can obtain recognition, I plan to address the Senate briefly in regard to the bill and, in particular, in regard to some other phases of the over-all program of economic mobilization for national defense; but I shall not undertake to discuss the bill in detail, because it is very fully covered by the report.

I hope all Members of the Senate will take the time and trouble to read the report.

Let me say that if after reading the report, any Member of the Senate still has any doubt in his mind about any of the provisions of the bill, tomorrow I shall be glad to yield to any Senator for questions; and if I am able to throw any light on any other phases of the bill, I shall be very happy to do so.

However, knowing that not many Senators will be present in the Chamber tomorrow, I certainly do not plan to make a long, extended speech of a prepared character. I merely wish to be of service, if I can, to the Senate in connection with having all Senators arrive at an understanding of a very technical and far-reaching bill, inasmuch as I have attended all the hearings and all the executive meetings we had with our technical experts in connection with preparation of the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I wish to conclude in a few minutes. There are several other matters I wish to mention; but already I have taken entirely too much of the time of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, to permit me to ask a very few questions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, first, I should like to ask a question in reference to a matter which the Senator may have covered in his previous remarks, but I did not hear all of them.

In the report, in reference to the President, we find the following:

> However, he stated that there was no objection to the enactment of additional stand-by authority to control prices and wages and to ration at the consumer level.

I understand, however, that the bill, if it goes into effect, as a matter of law would give the President authority to put into effect the price and wage provisions of the bill, and that there is no condition precedent and there is no specification of a length of time which must elapse before the President would have the legal right to put those powers into effect. Is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator from Missouri is correct. They are wholly permissive.

Mr. DONNELL. We would leave entirely to the discretion of the President the decision as to when he would put them into effect, if at all; would we?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator from Missouri is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not know exactly the meaning of the term "stand-by," as used in the report; but I judge that there would be justification for an inference to the effect that the bill sets aside these powers, and says they cannot be exercised until some other event occurs. I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator from Missouri is correct. I say to him that I have not discussed this portion of the bill; I was just coming to it. However, I shall skip ahead a little and shall say that the provisions I have discussed thus far were included in the original bill which was sent up with administration approval; I refer to the powers the President requested.

The powers the Senator from Missouri is discussing now were not requested by the President, but they grew out of the testimony taken before the committee. On that basis, a good many of us felt that these additional powers should be given on a permissive basis. We had prepared an amendment designed to place those powers into effect. The able chairman of the committee joined with me in offering the amendment in committee. It was adopted substantially in the form in which we offered it. Of course, there were a good many committee amendments, but it was adopted substantially in that form.

In the declaration of policy as originally drawn the word "stand-by" was used. The committee deliberately deleted the word, because we did not want to convey the meaning that there was anything in the bill which required the President to make stand-by controls, and instead of using the word "stand-by" we have tried to get away from it and to use the word "permissive." They are wholly permissive so far as the occasions for them are concerned, so far as the need of them is concerned, and so far as the time of putting them into effect is concerned.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Then am I correct in understanding that if this bill be passed in its present form the President would have the legal power to put into effect forthwith, if he in his judgment thought it desirable, the regulations and orders affecting the price and wage stabilization contained in title IV of the act.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. The second question I want to ask the Senator is this: The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], whom I do not see upon the floor at the moment, asked certain questions with respect to the American system of competitive enterprise, that being referred to in the bill. I note in the course of the report some reference to the same subject. I desire to ask first, Does the Senator from Alabama consider that there is anything in the bill which is contrary to the American system of competitive enterprise?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not at all.

Mr. DONNELL. Then why is it necessary in the bill, in line 10, of page 29, to say that it is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use these powers "within the framework"—and now I emphasize, underscoring by my voice the words—"as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise"; and again, on page 39, at line 11, the words "so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise"?

My question is, as the Senator will observe, that if there is nothing in the bill which is contrary to the American system of competitive enterprise—bearing in mind that this is a defense measure, I take it—why is it necessary to indicate that in some instances, perhaps, the President or some one else may go outside the American system of competitive enterprise in carrying out the powers of the bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say to the able Senator from Missouri that in answer to a previous question along the same line I stated that, in my opinion, the insertion of those words does not add anything whatever, and that had the words been omitted, the President still would have been required under the terms of the act to stay within the framework of the American competitive free enterprise system. But I may say that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] offered that amendment in committee, apparently with the feeling that it was doubly stating the objective toward which we were driving.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, if there is nothing in the bill which is contrary to the American system of competitive enterprise, would the distinguished Senator, whom I am now addressing, have any objection to an amendment which would strike out of line 10, on page 29, the words "as far as practicable", and which would strike out, on page 39, line 11, the words "so far as practicable"?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say to the Senator from Missouri that if those words were stricken out, it would then really be writing a limitation into the act; for instance, the allocation of materials, and the control by the President over materials. Many of these controls are not, strictly speaking, in keeping with the competitive enterprise system and would restrict and limit the freedom of choice and decision which manufacturers and distributors exercise freely in normal times. We recognize that. That is why we say "as far as practicable."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the Senator then contradict himself in his earlier statement, once repeated?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood the Senator to say there is nothing in the bill, in his opinion, which is contrary to the American system of competitive enterprise. Yet he now tells us—and he may be quite correct; I am not arguing the question—that there are certain things in the bill which are contrary to the American system of competitive enterprise. I judge that he would be unwilling to strike out the words "so far as practicable."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course, Mr. President, I want to say in all sincerity that I did not think the able Senator from Missouri would quibble or split hairs, because I think we all recognize——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it is not quibbling. We are discussing a very important subject.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We all recognize the fact that war powers entail certain things which, not for anything in the world, would we have imposed on our economy in peacetime. We recognize that fact. Of course, these are unusual powers, but we still say that, so far as practicable, these powers, unusual as they are, must be exercised within the framework of the competitive enterprise system, and that the Government shall not unduly do anything to compete with private enterprise.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Of course, I thoroughly concur in the statement of the Senator that certain powers may be exercised in time of war, which obviously must limit competitive enterprise. I can see that point. But it would seem to me——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think the Senator will agree with me that the establishment of priorities and allocations, or price and wage controls, are examples of actions which limit and restrict free enterprise, and are departures from our normal way of doing business.

Mr. DONNELL. But the point I am making, Mr. President, by my questions, is that, although I understood the Senator to answer twice that it contains nothing which is contrary to the American system of competitive enterprise, and I take it now that the Senator takes the view that it is, in some instances, and perhaps necessarily; I am not quarreling with him on that, yet this bill is, in some instances, contrary to that system, and that the provisions of the bill are justified insofar as they are thus contrary, because of the fact that they apply to a war situation. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not going to quibble with the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me finish.

Mr. DONNELL. May I say, Mr. President, I do not particularly agree—I certainly do not at all agree—with the idea that because a question is asked, it constitutes quibbling? I may add, if the Senator will yield, that we are dealing here with a pretty fundamental subject.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I certainly withdraw the reference to quibbling. I do not want to be arguing with the Senator from Missouri to the effect, and I do not want to be placed in the attitude that we are doing something here that is contrary to the competitive enterprise system, because it is something which is recognized under the Constitution of the United States as being fundamental and as being fundamentally necessary in time of war. I think the Senator will agree with me that in time of war or in times of national emergency, in times of stress and strain, we can give the President unusual powers. I certainly will go so far as to say, as I stated previously in opening my remarks, that this is a bill which gives very wide and vast powers to the President of the United States, very usual powers. We can give him unusual powers, which certainly we would not think of giving him or anyone else except under the force of absolute necessity. However, I do not like to be placed in the position of saying that that is inconsistent with the private competitive enterprise system. I think it is supplementary to it and essential to the survival of that system. But certainly, if the able Senator is willing to take my statement to the effect that these are powers which go outside our normal operation in peacetime, I shall agree with him.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina, if he desires to answer the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wanted to suggest to my distinguished friend from Missouri and to the Senator from Alabama that when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] was here a few moments ago, suggesting a further amendment, he talked to me about it at the time, and his thought was that when we allocate materials we necessarily interfere with the free enterprise system, and that when we allocated steel, for instance, as a matter of national defense, to the Cadillac Co. for the purpose of being used in the building of tanks, and took it away perhaps from the Ford Motor Co., where it would have been used in the building of automobiles, we were going beyond the ordinary limits of free enterprise, but this can and must be done consistent with the spirit and principles of the free-enterprise system. The Senator from Virginia mentioned that example to me as an illustration.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I think there is no fundamental difference between the Senator from Alabama and me on this proposition.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I do not think there is.

Mr. DONNELL. But I think it is quite clear that this bill, because of the war situation, does limit the American system of competitive enterprise in the respect indicated by the Senator.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There is no question in my mind that that statement is correct. I said so in the beginning of my remarks earlier in the afternoon.

Mr. DONNELL. I did not hear that portion of the Senator's statement.

Perhaps the Senator intended to discuss this point later on, and if he did, I shall withdraw the question, but I should like to invite his attention to page 58, lines 4 and following, at which there is a very important statement with respect to the settlement of labor disputes, which provides:

> The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and—> to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

I desire to ask the Senator a question. I may say, first, that I have read the further provisions of section 503 and I think I understand their conduct, but the question I ask is a hypothetical one. In the railway situation, with which we are now confronted, the one which was mentioned yesterday, where the heads of two great railroad brotherhoods have recommended to the President the taking over of the operation of the railroads, informing the country, in their message to the President, of the probable—perhaps I should withdraw the word "probable"—the possible interruption of important railway transportation that may result under present conditions, may I ask the Senator, if this bill should be enacted, whether the President, as the Senator construes it, would have the authority (1) to require the acceptance by the employees of the railroads of the findings of the Emergency Board, which have already been made, or (2) would the President have the power, under the terms of this bill, to decide what the wages and working conditions should be and to require the carriers and the employees to accept all such wages and working conditions as the President might specify?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I should like to say, first, to the Senator from Missouri that I do not pose as an expert on labor matters or labor legislation. I very much wish that the able Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] were on the floor at the present time. I am sure he would be willing to discuss the question at length with the able Senator from Missouri. I will say, however, that in these labor dispute provisions we have tried to parallel the procedure followed in World War II. I am sure the able Senator from Missouri, who is a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, knows a great deal more about this question than I do, but it was our intention to parallel closely the procedure which was followed in World War II disputes. We do not abrogate any labor act. In fact, we make provision in one section that nothing shall be done that would be inconsistent with any applicable labor act. I would answer the Senator by saying that, according to my understanding, the President could not do anything that he cannot now do under existing acts, other than to establish boards and commissions, to outline procedure, and to call labor-management conferences. But whatever is done will have to be in keeping with applicable labor statutes.

While I did not keep up with it as closely as I am sure the Senator from Missouri did, he being a very valuable member of the Commitee on Labor and Public Welfare, my reaction is that we got along very well during World War II with the War Labor Board and the Wage Stabilization Board in the settlement of labor disputes. We did not abrogate existing statutes, but worked in a way to supplement them and to expedite action under them.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I appreciate the very careful statement of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, and I can well understand from section 503 the fact that it is there provided that any such action shall be consistent with certain enumerated laws and other applicable laws, but I most respectfully submit that the specific question I asked has not been answered. If the Senator prefers that the Senator from New York answer the question, it is agreeable to me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his question I should prefer that he pose his question to the able Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], who has given a great deal of attention to these questions, or to some other member of the committee who is better prepared to answer the question than I am.

Mr. DONNELL. That is very fair, and I shall be happy to withhold my question.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Alabama a question, since he has touched upon the matter of wages with reference to which the Senator from Missouri was interrogating him. I take it that under this bill action could be taken by the President on wage control at his pleasure or whenever he deemed it necessary. Are we clear on that point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. In that event, is there any provision in the bill as to holding public hearings where there is involved an employer-employee relationship, and hearing interested parties in cases where price controls and wage controls might turn on a great many factors? Do I correctly understand that persons interested in that phase of the question would not have an opportunity for public hearing? Maybe the Senator can enlighten me further about it. I confess that I have not had time to go thoroughly over the bill or to read thoroughly the report.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that, first of all, in the wage stabilization section of the bill and also in the price stabilization section, we give the President authority to try to work out voluntary arrangements whereby these things can be done, but we recognize that in some instances, possibly in many instances, that would not be feasible. However, we give the President the right, as the Senator has correctly stated, to put into effect, whenever he sees fit, controls on prices or wages, but we have provided that there shall be established industry committees.

We do not tell the President exactly how he must act, and I do not believe that would be necessary. I do not believe the Senator from Kansas would suggest that the President be directed to hold public hearings on any wage controls. But certainly it is within the contemplation of the committee that the industry affected would be called in and that every effort would be made to work out differences by friendly agreements, and in the event of failure, the matter could be referred to the board or to the commission, or to whatever organization the President might establish to handle the particular problem. That board or commission would be authorized to reach a determination in whatever way it deemed best.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I agree with the distinguished Senator that, obviously, the President could not hold hearings, but within the framework of this proposed legislation——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I refer the Senator specifically to section 404, which reads, as follows:

> In carrying out the provisions of this title—

That is the title relating to price control and wage control—

> In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does the distinguished Senator from Alabama feel that there would be opportunity given by an industry committee or some other committee which has been established to permit hearings, or, at least, to permit interested persons to have their day within a reasonable time, as expeditiously as possible, and to be heard on some phases that might interest them or which might very seriously affect their respective industries?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct. I invite his attention to section 701, on page 65, of the bill. Section 701 is a general provision, covering everything in the bill, not merely one particular title. Subparagraph (ii) provides as follows:

> (ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry.

We have tried to make certain that it would be absolutely representative. I again refer the able Senator from Kansas to section 709 at page 74. Beginning with the second sentence in line 7 the section reads:

> Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense—

I believe the Senator will agree with me that the act seals up the requirement that industry be consulted. In other words no finding, rule, or regulation of general applicability can be issued unless certification is made that industry has been consulted. If circumstances are such as to make it impracticable to consult with industry, that fact must be certified in connection with the issuance of any regulation or order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I thank the Senator. I agree that it is a necessary and proper safeguard which we should very diligently watch throughout this entire matter.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, let me repeat the statement I made previously. I have never known of a piece of legislation which has received such careful, searching, and diligent effort to write into it proper safeguards, because we recognized the fact that we were granting vast and unusual powers to the President of the United States. It is a carefully worked out piece of legislation. As I stated earlier in the day, the very fact that the bill was reported by the committee unanimously by a vote of 13 to 0 indicates the care and study with which it was prepared.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama that that is correct, and I wish to compliment the members of the committee. I know their task has not been an easy one, and they are to be commended for their work.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Not having had the benefit of hearing the entire address of the able Senator from Alabama I should like to ask him some questions. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I was excused to continue a hearing this afternoon. That is the reason why I was out of the Chamber. I should like to inquire of the Senator as to what was in the mind of the committee and what was written into the bill relative to commodity exchanges.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I spent a little time explaining that subject early in the afternoon.

Mr. THYE. I am sorry I was not present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand the Senator was necesarily detained in a committee meeting. Let me suggest to the Senator that he read my remarks in the RECORD, because I discussed the subject at great length. However, we struck out section 411, which related to increasing margins for trading on commodity markets. I explained the reason for our action at some length earlier in the afternoon.

Mr. THYE. The reason was that in World War II there had been exchange restrictions imposed upon the commodity exchanges, as was proposed in section 411, is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The committee felt that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the distinguished Senator from Minnesota is a member, ought to give very careful study looking toward are writing of the Commodity Exchange Act, so as to provide greater prohibitions against purely speculative trade. We realized that it could not be done with merely a few words. I believe it would require a considerable rewriting of the whole act. Largely that was the reason for our not going into it, because we felt that under section 411 we would simply have provided for an increase in margins across the board, which would have hit the small legitimate trader just as hard as it would have hit every speculative trader.

Mr. THYE. Every local elevator must use the commodity exchange in its normal daily functioning.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I used an illustration with which I am more famiilar, just as the Senator is more familiar with grain elevators. I used cotton. I referred to the home-town boy who becomes a cotton merchant instead of a grocer, for example. He provides the outlet for the sale of the farmer's cotton. Whenever the boy sells a bale of cotton to a mill he must have some insurance with which to protect himself, because the transaction goes through a system of hedging. Under section 411, which contemplated increases in margins across the board, he would have been hit, and he would have been handicapped in his buying. I believe many times it would have denied to the farmer a real legitimate market, whereas the big trader—and I used Anderson & Clayton as an example, which is a fine company, and with plenty of capital—could have traded without any difficulty whatever, perhaps even with much greater margin requirements.

Mr. THYE. I should like to ask the Senator one other question. It relates to real-estate credit, and the restrictions which might be imposed upon that phase of our economy.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I discussed that subject earlier today. Briefly, no control is placed on the ordinary sale and purchase of real estate. However, in the case of new construction which involves mortgage financing, controls are provided. Two kinds of controls are provided: First, the conventional mortgage type of loan, that is, where a man builds a house and borrows money from his local bank, a neighbor, or someone else, in which case we say the Federal Reserve Board may exercise credit controls. It is somewhat similar to regulation W.

Mr. THYE. It is left entirely to the Federal Reserve Board rather than a new board, which would not have the long-established confidence and reputation of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct. We gave the Federal Reserve Board regulation over consumer credit, through regulation W, and we gave it control over real-estate credit in the conventional mortgage-type loan. There is another type of loan to which I wish to refer. Approximately 50 percent of new housing today is built with some kind of Government aid, either FHA, VA, farm housing, or public housing. In such instances we provide that the President shall have power to regulate credit controls. We contemplate it would parallel and as near as practicable be uniform with controls applying to conventional mortgage loans.

Mr. THYE. Would the President be empowered to establish a board which would deal specifically with that phase?

Mr. SPARKMAN. We did not write such a provision into the bill, but my assumption is that the President would use the agency which is already in existence, namely, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and that he would say to the Administrator of the Agency, "I want you and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board to consult on these matters and come to a conclusion as to what control should be placed on real-estate loans."

Mr. THYE. Would the same provision of the bill which was referred to a few moments ago in the colloquy with the Senator from Kansas, under which there would be hearings with the trade or the interested parties before any rules and regulations were promulgated, relate to controls on real estate?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The last two sections to which I referred, section 701 and section 709, are general provisions and they relate to the whole act, everything in it.

Mr. THYE. In other words, if a board were established by the President to deal with this particular phase of financing, before the board could promulgate any rules which would be imposed upon the contractor, or the builder, or the financier, the interested people would be given an opportunity to discuss the subject, and to file any objection before rules and regulations were imposed. Am I to understand the bill to operate in that manner?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. The Senator continues to use the expression "if the President establishes a new board." I desire to make it clear that we do not anticipate the President's creating a new board with reference to real estate credit controls. I desire to make it clear, and I do not want it misunderstood, that the committee contemplated the conventional type loans administered by the Federal Reserve Board. We wanted them administered by the President, but we understood he would utilize the existing Housing and Home Finance Agency. I do not want anything to appear to indicate that we want any other board established.

Mr. THYE. However, there is a distinction between the two phases of loaning, and for that reason the President might, if he should so desire, set up another board, because it is discretionary with him as to which agency he would use. I am happy to have the explanation that before any rules and regulations would be promulgated and imposed, the person affected would have an opportunity to be heard. I understood the Senator to so indicate, and if that is correct, that answers my question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly believe the Senator to be correct, that regardless of who issues the regulations or the orders, before doing so he will be required to specify that the particular industry affected has been consulted, or, if not practicable to consult with the industry, that must be stated, and the reasons why given. That is provided for in section 709.

Mr. THYE. That does give us the assurance that there will be no regulations which will come out overnight, so to speak, and be imposed upon an industry or trade, which would be impracticable, a rule or regulation imposed which would be a great hardship upon the individuals who would come under it. I believe that is a safeguard within the bill which should give us assurance that the law will be administered in a manner which will not impose hardship upon anyone in particular.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I agree with the Senator entirely. The bill would require consultation wherever practicable. Of course, there will be some occasions where it would not be appropriate to consult in advance. There may not be time, when speed is vital. Sometimes giving advance notice of a proposed restriction would defeat the purpose of the restriction, or consulting a few people in an industry would give them an unfair advantage over the rest of the industry.

Mr. President, the matter of price control and wage control has been discussed, and I shall not take more time on it. I desire to make it clear that we tie wage controls and price controls together, and if the President ever comes to the point of putting price controls on a substantial part of the American economy, he must invoke wage control.

On the question of rationing, we do not require him to invoke rationing. That is purely permissive.

Section 708 deals with the Antitrust Act. Small business has been greatly concerned about the provision in the bill which exempts certain acts taken at the request of the President from the provisions of the antitrust laws.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator have before him the page and line where it is required that in the event the President shall bring about price control he must also bring about wage control? I have before me page 40, and I wondered if that was the page to which the Senator referred.

Mr. SPARKMAN. On page 42, line 9, it is provided:

> Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials, services, and property comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

Mr. DONNELL. I am sorry to have had to ask the Senator the question, but, as he realizes, it is necessary to listen with the ear and follow with the eye, because we have not yet had an opportunity to read the bill thoroughly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct, and I appreciate that Senators have not had an opportunity particularly to study the report, because we finished the bill just a couple of nights ago, about midnight, after a 10-hour committee session, and it simply was not humanly possible to get the report finished and printed and on Senator's desks before noon today.

Mr. DONNELL. I express for myself, at any rate, appreciation of the very fine analysis the Senator from Alabama has been giving us. It has been very helpful to me, and I for one am very grateful to him.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I appreciate those words on the part of the able Senator from Missouri.

I wish to say just a word with reference to the proposed exemption from antitrust laws, because there has been a great deal of concern expressed, particularly by small business, regarding this proposal.

We provide in the bill for voluntary agreements and programs. We hope that many of these things can be worked out voluntarily. It is simply impossible for representatives of industry to come together with the Government and discuss these matters, particularly if they have to do with allocating materials, making prices, and many other things. If they do some of these things, they are subject to the antitrust laws. The exemption is for the purpose of permitting those things to be done under careful supervision by the Government and only after consultation with the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission. We have tried to safeguard the bill just as much as we could. We added an amendment to the bill providing that the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission shall be called into consultation, and shall be given notice of proposed actions under these provisions, so that every precaution can be taken to prevent any injury to competitors or the public or any lasting infringements on our free competitive economy. By putting the Federal Trade Commission fully into the picture small business can be assured that its interests will be well protected.

We believe that the power is pretty well safeguarded in the provisions we have written into the bill, and we have a feeling that small business need not be afraid that, as a result of the particular provisions we have made, big companies are going to be allowed to run rampant and create monopolies. Certainly it is the intention of the committee—and I am sure this is true of the entire Senate and the Congress—to do everything possible to preserve the free, competitive-enterprise system and the very important part small business plays in that system.

Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy and attention of Senators to my effort to explain the pending measure. By and large, I believe the committee has done an excellent job, and presented to the Senate a good measure, which should be enacted into law.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 193) to amend section 14 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, for the purpose of correcting an error in Public Law 591, Eighty-first Congress.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 21) to provide for the utilization of a part of the unfinished portion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol to portray the story of aviation.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 602. An act for the relief of Fritz Busche; and

THE STATE DEPARTMENT AND UNITED STATES POLICIES IN THE FAR EAST

Mr. KNOWLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, does the Senator expect to make an extensive address?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I expect to speak for about half an hour on the State Department and the policies of the Government in the Far East.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder if the distinguished Senator would yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded, and that the further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the overt aggression by the Soviet-inspired North Korean Communist forces against the Republic of Korea made clear to the people of this Nation and to the free people of the world that the Soviet Union's double talk about peace was and is a mask for war.

Only the naive could have believed that the tiger of international communism had become the dove of peace. At this critical hour in the history of this Republic, the naive should not be directing our foreign policy.

It had not been my intention to review the events of the past year quite so soon. Indications have recently materialized that make an analysis of our policy—past, present, and future—essential at this time.

This crisis is not something that concerns Secretary Acheson and the executive department of the Government alone. The life of our Republic and the freedom of our people are at stake. The Congress has a responsibility it cannot and should not abdicate to anyone.

While the President of the United States has great powers in peacetime under our Constitution, his wartime powers are even greater but they are not unlimited. Nor should they be. Congress should pass legislation to meet the defense needs of the Nation but no powers in excess of those requirements should be granted.

On June 24, 1949, 21 Senators wrote President Truman and called for assurances that the United States would not recognize the Communist regime in China. The letter read as follows:

JUNE 24, 1949.

Hon. HARRY TRUMAN,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned Members of the Senate have been greatly concerned by reports that this Government might be contemplating the recognition of the Communist regime in China.

Any such policy would appear to be inconsistent with the position this Government took in Greece and Turkey when the Truman doctrine was enunciated and with the substantial support we have given through the Marshall plan to the nations of western Europe and with the North Atlantic Pact against aggression in western Europe.

Communist control of China means the ultimate negation of the open door trade policy; loss of freedom and independence in a real sense for the people of China and a major victory for international communism with a corresponding threat to the national security of the United States.

We believe that the time has come for the adoption of an affirmative friendly policy toward the constitutional government of China and the forces opposing communism in that country.

We further believe that this Government should make it clear that no recognition of the Communist forces in China is presently contemplated and that we shall make clear that a free, independent and non-Communist China will continue to have the friendship and assistance of the United States of America.

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND, PAT MCCARRAN, STYLES BRIDGES, WARREN MAGNUSON, OWEN BREWSTER, CLYDE REED, SHERIDAN DOWNEY, KARL MUNDT, HOMER FERGUSON, WAYNE MORSE, MILTON YOUNG, RAYMOND BALDWIN, EDWARD THYE, ROBERT A. TAFT, JOHN BRICKER, SPESSARD HOLLAND, RICHARD B. RUSSELL, EDWARD MARTIN, HUGH BUTLER, GUY CORDON, HARRY CAIN.

The background for this letter is important. In mid-June of last year reliable reports were current that discussions were taking place between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States relative to the recognition of the Communist regime in China.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, in the body of the RECORD, a portion of an article which appeared in the April-May 1950 issue of Labor's Monthly Survey, which is published by the American Federation of Labor, beginning on page 5, under the heading "Soviet plans further aggression from its China base," and ending at the top of page 7.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOVIET PLANS FURTHER AGGRESSION FROM ITS CHINA BASE

Soviet control in China follows the pattern familiar in Europe. Stalin's puppet Mao carries out his orders, and in return Stalin supplies him with the armed force necessary to keep him in power and to carry forward the Soviet conquests. Soviet planes and equipment are being furnished, Soviet generals direct Red China's armies. From its China base, the Soviet reaches for Indochina, plans a drive into Tibet, infiltrates Thailand, has already conquered the island of Hainan, looks toward a drive on Formosa, the last island stronghold of the legitimate Government of China. By fomenting civil war in Indochina and attacking the Viet Nam Government which is a member of the French Union, Stalin accomplishes a double purpose: He forces the French to drain their military strength away from Europe, and also prepares a further Communist advance into southeast Asia, toward Indonesia, Malaya, Burma, with the goal of outflanking India. And India is the key to this vital southeastern area, rich in so many essential raw materials. This is an area of great danger to United States of America, at the western door to our own country.

It is significant that the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions is sending a delegation to India and the Far East preliminary to setting up a branch office there. Such an office will be a vital rallying point for free-trade unionists who seek to defeat Communist efforts to capture the Indian and other trade-union movements.

In China the ruthless Communist conquest has brought the people to poverty and starvation. It is estimated that about 10,000,000 Chinese will die of starvation this year, and the Soviet has refused to permit the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization to send food to them. Many of the free trade unionists who sought to better the conditions of Chinese workers have been murdered in cold blood. Liu Sung-shan, veteran trade-union leader revered by all, had been three times Chinese workers' delegate to the International Labor Organization. He thought he could carry on his trade-union activities under the Communist government as he would under any other, and continued to help the Chinese workers. He was beheaded by the Communist authorities.

On the island of Formosa are the headquarters of the anti-Communist underground movements active on the mainland. Formosa is the key to maintenance of legitimate governments in the Philippines, Japan, and the far eastern islands. Anti-Communists everywhere can help by aid to these resistance organizations. Here is the last chance for the United States to take a stand against the spread of Communist aggression across the Pacific to our own shores.

DEATH WARRANT FOR THE UNITED NATIONS?

The United Nations was set up 5 years ago to suppress acts of aggression and bring about settlement of international disputes by peaceful means and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law. All members, including the U. S. S. R., pledged themselves to respect the territorial integrity and political independence of any state and to refrain from the use of force. Stalin now seeks to remove from the United Nations the legitimate Government of China, a charter member, and replace it with the usurping Communist regime, imposed on the people of China by military conquest in violation of the United Nations Charter. He hopes by so doing to secure for himself two of the five veto powers on the Security Council.

As the chairman of the Federation's Free Trade Union Committee points out, for the United Nations to agree to any such maneuver would be tantamount to signing its own death warrant. If, instead of striving to protect weaker states and insisting on law and justice, the United Nations becomes a means of endorsing aggression and recognizing states set up by military conquest, it will follow the League of Nations to the scrap heap.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I also wish to read from the same publication, Labor's Monthly Survey, published by the American Federation of Labor, in its June 1950 issue, the following:

A major move in Soviet strategy is the drive to seat Communist China in the United Nations as a permanent member with veto power on the Security Council. To accom-

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3644. An act to amend the War Claims Act of 1948, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 326

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses or adjourns on Friday, August 11, 1950, it be until Monday, August 14, 1950, and that on said day, and until otherwise ordered, it meet in the old Supreme Court room in the Capitol.

Resolved, That all rules relating to the Senate Chamber shall be applicable to the old Supreme Court room.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the President of the United States and to the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9038. An act to authorize the President to determine the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods and procedures, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. HOEY, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. MCCARTHY, and Mr. MUNDT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1838) entitled "An act to amend title 28 of the United States Code relating to fees of United States marshals," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. EASTLAND, and Mr. WILEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 227]

Barrett, Wyo.	Hobbs	Quinn

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 368 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9176, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Before rising on yesterday, the Committee agreed that the further reading of the committee substitute be dispensed with and open to amendment.

Are there any further amendments?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a sentiment on the part of some Members of the House to give the President powers that he does not want and to reduce the powers that he does want to control inflation. If we do not give him sufficient powers to control the conditions that exist now the responsibility will be upon the Congress and not upon the President.

I have no sympathy with the argument that if we give the President these powers he will misuse them. I know the President, and he is pretty much the same man now as he was when he was Harry S. Truman, at Independence, Mo. He is not grasping powers, and does not want them except to be used for his country's good. To say that he would control the life blood of the Nation if you let him control the credit ought to have no weight with you.

It has been stated that under the act as originally drafted if John Smith lends his friend, Bill Jones, $100, to be paid in installments, the lender and the borrower would have to make themselves amenable to all the provisions of this act. That is just pure nonsense. There would be orders and regulations that would exclude any transaction of that kind from the operation of the law.

The wise Constitution makers who created the office of President and who, I think, were probably the wisest men that ever sat around the council table—I think the Mighty Ruler of the universe had His hand upon their shoulders—granted powers to the President that were stupendous; unlimited powers. He is the Commander in Chief of the Armies and the Navies of the United States and of the militia when called into action. He can take the admiral off the bridge of the flagship as he goes into battle and say, "I command." He can take the commander in chief out of the field as our forces go into battle and say, "I command." But do you think he would do it? Of course he would not do it, any more than he would misuse the powers we are granting him under this bill.

He has the power of pardon and reprieve given him by the Constitution. He can open the gates of our Federal prisons and let out every man that has been convicted of crime. Is there any parallel in granting that power? Of course not.

He must approve or disapprove every act of Congress. He has the right to veto every act we pass. That is a stupendous power. Does he misuse it? Of course he does not, and no President ever has misused it.

He has a great responsibility. He is a normal man, and I know that responsibility weighs upon him. Then to talk about diminishing these comparatively trivial powers that are provided for in this bill, that amount to nothing as compared with the powers that were given him in the Constitution, is pure nonsense.

The President is not seeking these powers to enslave the people. He is not seeking these powers to destroy the lifeblood of our economy. He is seeking them to meet a condition which exists now and a condition he cannot meet unless you grant him these powers. I ask when you consider these things, to approach it in that spirit.

He can negotiate all the treaties of the United States, and if they are approved by the Senate, they become the supreme law of the land. Then it is said if we let him control a little credit we are taking a great chance on having the power misused. Please approach the consideration of this bill in that spirit in which the wise makers of the Constitution approach the problem of the creation of the office of President of the United States and the delegation to him in that greatest charter of government ever devised by man.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have very deep respect for the gentleman from Kentucky. I think there is no more able, deep thinking, and fundamentally thinking, man in the House than the gentleman from Kentucky, BRENT SPENCE. He is a philosophical gentleman, fair in all of his undertakings, and, of course, in realizing that the President has all these extremely important powers which are given to him by the Constitution he must recognize that the Congress of the United States is also a part of this governmental integrated machine by which through checks and balances America operates and has become the greatest country under God's canopy. We want to keep it that way.

Now, to take literally the statements of the gentleman from Kentucky we here in the Congress might abdicate our position as one of the three integrated branches of this American system of government with the assurance that the President of the United States, after receiving these powers, would be a benign dictator. The mere presence of the powers in the Executive sometimes is as destructive as the actual use of the powers. That is why we here in the Congress, a branch of the Government set up by those same founding fathers who created the executive branch, have an obligation to the people to preserve the American system of government and be very, very careful about the delegation of powers to the Executive, regardless of the individual who happens to occupy that office.

We should be very careful about the delegation of those powers which are fundamentally and basically delegated by the Constitution to the Congress.

We have a direct obligation to the people, because we are closer to them, as their representatives, than any other branch of the Government. The President is given a great many powers, but he has never, under the Constitution or by delegation from this Congress, had one single power that the Congress could not check on and balance off, either by overriding the Presidential veto, by refusing to confirm his treaties, or going further, even by impeachment. We have always in this Congress reserved the fight to check, and check perhaps immediately, upon autocracy, upon any misuse or maltreatment of the powers which we have delegated, or powers which the President has under the Constitution. We should always keep ourselves in that position. If we do not keep ourselves in that position, if we do not keep the fundamental. the basic concept of our republican democracy, the principles of which are established by the Constitution, in which each branch of the Congress retains its position as that of a check or balance against the other. then we destroy American constitutional government. We destroy the American system of government. We destroy the basic principles upon which this country has become the greatest country in the world. That is my obligation, and it should be yours.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Members realize the travesty which we are making of the great lawmaking power of this Congress. The shouts had hardly died down that we were not giving the President enough power when the men and women of this House were called upon to vote upon amendments to the pending bill to strike out of the bill some of the powers he asked for. You will be asked in a few minutes to strike out some of the others.

This is not a question of whether or not we are going to have any checks and balances. This Congress cannot administer any law that it enacts. You must create an agency or vest the power in someone to administer the law that we pass. That is what we are doing and what we are asked to do now, to vest in the President or in those to whom he may delegate the power, control of inflation in this country. You unhesitatingly gave him the power to control the lifeblood of the boys and girls, the youth of this country, who are going to do the fighting for us. Why do you hesitate now to give him the power to control the economy of the country? You are going to give him the right to control prices and wages, but you are not going to let him control the banking institutions and those who want to gamble on the commodity exchanges. You are going to say to the little men and women of this country, "You cannot buy a table or a bed for your home on the installment plan; you cannot go to the corner grocer or butcher and buy your foodstuffs for the table on a charge account, but we are going to let the gamblers continue to reap a harvest on the commodity exchange."

You are going to let the real-estate interests run wild in the lending of money for the roofs over their heads, while denying them the equipment for those same homes. And you talk about checks and balances. You have all the checks and balances you need in this very bill.

By concurrent resolution we can recall those powers overnight. What are you afraid of? The Commander in Chief, whom you have empowered to send those boys wherever they may be needed to defend our shores? He may do that, but you will not let him tell you that you cannot buy the materials that go into the armaments and matériel that those boys will need to carry on the battle.

Oh, what a travesty you are enacting here by what you are doing.

In a few moments you are going to be called upon, I hope, to stand up and be counted and have your names recorded permanently in the records of this Congress so that your children and the children who come after them may know who stood up here and said: "Send them over to fight, but keep from them that which they need to fight.

"Regiment the boys into the armed services. Regiment little lobbyless John

Q. Consumer back home. But stay away from the untouchables who can pressure us with their powerful lobbies. Exempt the agricultural exploiters, the commodity exchange manipulators, and the real-estate interests.

"Control the little man and woman in the home and in their daily activities, but let the money lenders, and the money changers, and the gamblers run riot."

The time will soon come for you to be recorded; let your conscience be your guide.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, there is no one of us who would take issue with the particular statements made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] under ordinary conditions; but we are not faced with ordinary conditions today; we are faced with a condition of danger, and when a condition of danger or imminent danger to our country or our way of life arises—it is much broader than our country, it is an attack, a challenge to a way of life which involves many peoples and countless of millions of people who are dominated by Communist dictators, people who want to be free and who believe in our way of life—we have got to meet it.

My friend from Michigan overlooked one important fact, that the Congress always has control of the purse—to appropriate money, and thereby can always control delegated powers. That is the great power of the Congress of the United States, control of the purse strings.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in this bill we delegate the power of appropriation to the President.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman state in what way?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes, I will.

Mr. McCORMACK. You mean by the creation of corporations?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; by directing the Treasury to buy the obligations of these agencies and treat it as a debt.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not the power to appropriate. That has been passed on. We had that in the housing bill and other legislation. I am talking about the power to appropriate, to employ help, to carry on in actual operation any of the delegated powers that might be given to the President. The Constitution vests in the Congress the power to appropriate, and the provision to which my friend refers has no relationship to that.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. May I invite the attention of the gentleman to the fact that under section 513 the Congress is further enabled by concurrent resolution to repeal any provision of this act?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

Mr. Chairman, we are faced with a world situation. Even under ordinary circumstances we have to delegate powers; we delegate powers to Federal agencies, the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission. All of our agencies particularly of a quasi-judicial nature have powers delegated to them which are both judicial and legislative; and we do that because the Congress cannot legislate with reference to every detail in the operation of a branch organic law, and I refer to the agencies that have regulatory powers. We have to delegate to them both quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative powers.

My friend from Michigan talks about the President's constitutional powers. The powers of the President under ordinary circumstances under the Constitution are limited. It is true that when an emergency is officially declared or war actually occurs tremendous war reserve powers come into operation that the President can utilize, but only after an emergency has been declared, a national emergency, or only after we have actually entered war or war has been declared, officially declared. We are not in that situation now; there has been no official declaration of a national emergency, and there has been no official declaration of war; so the war reserve powers that a President, not President Truman but a President of the United States, from the very day that our constitutional Government was instituted, possesses are not in operation now; therefore we have to go through the method of legislation and delegate powers to the President.

Even when a national emergency is declared, when we are at war, the reserve war powers of the President do not cover every field. So the framers of the Constitution took into consideration all of these things. They had confidence in the man who may be President of the United States, the only man whose constituency is the entire country.

We have a situation here where the great majority of the Members of this body want stronger powers in this emergency. We cannot legislate for every one of them. We have to delegate them somewhere. This bill sets forth proper standards that the President must meet.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have got to face realities. We are doing it within the constitutional framework of our Government. I hope, therefore, that these amendments and the other amendment that was adopted yesterday will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number or words.

Mr. Chairman, on last Friday after several days of rather futile work there were some consultations held and the matter of this pending legislation was put over until yesterday. Since that time there have been talks about bipartisanship. I do not know for sure what is meant by that; but in any event I take it to mean that politics as such might be given up for the moment and that we might proceed to try to write fair legislation to meet the real problems that confront us.

It is apparent from what we have heard from the Democratic side here today that the big drive is on to forestall any limitation that the Congress might see fit to write into legislation dealing with the powers requested by the President. I do not think that is quite the way to approach it. It was known last week that the gentleman from Michigan and many other Members of the House were very insistent that certain amendments be written into this legislation and it appeared then that Members in sufficient number would support the amendments. I do not know why at this hour there should be so much concern unless it is to save face or to say arbitrarily that there can be nothing touched in this legislation. To my mind that is not the proper way for the House to legislate and certainly it should not make much of an appeal to the Members on either side of the aisle.

It is said this country is in a crisis. Of course no one knows for sure how much of a crisis we are in. It is being contended that this is not a real war that we are in, that it is only a police action. But there are many people in the country who think we are rushing headlong into too much regimentation, too much control, and a lot of the people, at high and low places both, are concerned.

Everyone recognizes through the years of history of this great country that the people have evidenced their genius for self-government in being willing to go along in times of crisis and to grant great powers over the lives of the people to a strong centralized Government. That is all right. But is that any reason to say that we must grant more powers than are needed? Throughout our history likewise has the genius of our people for self-government been evidenced in the fact that once the crisis has passed, they have recaptured for themselves the powers that they willingly yielded. It may be all right to say that by a concurrent resolution the Congress can recapture these powers. However, those of us who have served here in recent years are not going to be misled by that argument because we have seen how increasingly difficult it has become month after month and year after year to recapture those powers for the people.

Now, what lesson does that point for us? May I say to my friends on the Democratic side of the aisle as well as on my side, it points clearly to the proposition that as responsible Members of this great branch of the Government we should yield no more powers to the Executive than are necessary to meet our necessities. What is the principal problem before us as it is presented? Why, it is to carry on this war or police action, whatever you want to call it, to a successful conclusion, to muster our resources to bring about that successful conclusion, and at the same time to see to it, if we can, that run-away inflation does not destroy us here at home.

That does not mean, my friends of the committee, and Mr. Chairman, that it is required of us that we regiment the country completely or socialize the country. You know, I have always said that no dictator nation could lick us because the productivity of men enslaved to a state can never equal the productivity of free men. That has been proved time and again. Now then, I do not say that in these measures we are enslaving the American people but, believe me, unchecked, used without restraint, it could go far in that direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Under those circumstances does it not behoove us now, under our responsibility, to grant only the powers that are needed? And, if later on more are needed, then it will be as easy, yes, easier for the Congress to grant those additional powers than to recapture them, once excessive power is granted; or yes, possibly to undo the damage that we might create by going too far.

Much has been said about the boys fighting abroad. Of course, they are fighting abroad. What for? Some of them say they do not know. Well, I think I know. They are fighting for their country; they are fighting for the kind of government we believe in; they are fighting for free people because they want us to remain that way, and I think the force of their arms, supplied by this great country of ours here at home, will be successful. But, is that any reason why we should jeopardize here at home the very thing which they are fighting to preserve?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I call the attention of my friend to the fact that the House itself is giving to the President greater power than he actually asked for?

Mr. HALLECK. Now then, let me just say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, when the debate opened on this measure under the rule, I said then that there was no real emergency in respect to any of the powers asked in the committee bill as reported to justify proceeding without hearings, unless maybe it is on the consumer credit side. Why, less than 5 percent of the steel of this country is going into defense production. Will anyone challenge that? No, you cannot, because it is the truth. There is no actual war effort operation that is being prejudiced in any way by any lack of power in the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is these objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I would like to respond further to what the gentleman asked me and then I shall be glad to yield.

I said also in that opening statement that if there was anything of immediate emergency or consequence that demanded immediate action by the Congress, it was this matter of increasing prices. Now then, that is the reason, if I may remind the majority leader, that the Congress moved to meet that emergency. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency said that the only reason we had the original Spence substitute was because the minority was demanding that something be done about inflationary tendencies.

Beyond that, I still insist that the powers asked for in this committee bill as reported are broader than are necessary or essential or advisable, and it is no argument against our insistence that some of those powers be restricted to bring them in line with the immediate necessities to say that because somebody insisted that something be done on the price control front that we are asking for more power than the President asked for himself.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has frankly stated his position now, as he did before. The gentleman is of the opinion that there is no necessity for any legislation now. Is that correct?

Mr. HALLECK. I did not say that.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree that the gentleman did not use that language; that is true. I want to be fair. But is that the deduction to draw?

Mr. HALLECK. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is opposed to the committee substitute?

Mr. HALLECK. If the gentleman will permit me, I can make myself perfectly clear.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am a little bit too fair to try to ask a catch question. I would not do that.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman is not asking me a catch question. If there is a catch, I will find it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would not do that.

Mr. HALLECK. I appreciate that. The gentleman from Massachusetts has always been fair with me and I try to be fair with the gentleman. I propose to vote for this bill, hoping that it will be amended in several particulars. That is a fair answer, is it not?

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman in favor of all the provisions of the bill?

Mr. HALLECK. I certainly am not. I do not believe I am required under my responsibility to come in here and rubber stamp any proposal that comes from downtown. In my time here I have seen too much of that.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the President asked for powers that would permit him to set up an agency that would grant priorities and allocations, also authority to requisition plants that are needed in the war effort, also for the expansion of productive capacity and supply, in addition to control of credit and commodity speculation. He did not ask for broad powers. Now he is criticized because he has asked for broad powers, which he has not asked for.

It is true that probably a majority of the Members of this House, doubtless a majority, want something done about prices and wages. I am for that myself. We have written that provision into this bill, which is satisfactory to the majority. The President is perfectly willing to accept the responsibility. He has said so publicly. But he has not asked for the broad powers that the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Michigan have stated here on the floor of this House, he has asked only for limited powers.

WORTHLESS MONEY

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] said that free people work better than those who are slaves to the state. I thoroughly agree with him. At the same time, free people in a free country like our own will not willingly work for worthless money. Unless you do something to stop it, we are going in the direction of worthless money in this country. I do not care what kind of a war we have, people will not willingly work for worthless money.

This is an effort to stabilize our country, to stabilize the dollar, to keep it from becoming less valuable. We want valuable dollars, so men will willingly work for valuable dollars to build our country in time of peace and save it in time of war.

Pretty soon we will have some amendments offered to exempt the big fellows which is wanted by the real-estate lobby. They want to be exempted. They do not want to be included. The amendment will come up and strong pleas will be made for it, and there will be amendments providing exemptions for other special classes and special groups. All these powers are wanted up to a point, but when you begin to step on the toes of certain people in this country they begin to scream and then ask for exemptions from those powers.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a very reasonable bill. It grants the President the powers that he has asked for, if it is not substantially amended and the main parts of it taken out. It also provides for price and wage controls.

Yesterday a provision was written into the bill which, if carried out to its ultimate conclusion and if the intention of that provision is carried out, is likely to wreck the country. This bill in the Senate provides for a separate agency to administer it. You cannot set up a separate agency in 3 months, and probably in not less than 4 or 5. So, if you force the President to fix price and wage controls immediately, with no mechanism to enforce or administer it or adjust any inequalities or injustices, there will be so much confusion and chaos that the whole thing is liable to break down in 90 days. So I still think this bill is a good bill with these three gears: First, voluntary controls; next, selective controls; and next, all-out controls.

During the time in which the first two phases are in operation, we will be preparing for the third phase, if and when it becomes necessary. But we cannot do it all when we have no mechanism set up to do it. I hope the bill is passed substantially as is, without amendments calculated to destroy it.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a few comments on some of the remarks that have been made this morning. The gentleman from New York took the floor and said that during the past few days we have been conducting a travesty here on the floor of the House because we have been giving, or trying to give, the President some powers that he did not want, and were not giving him some of those for which he had asked.

If the Congress is a deliberative body in which reside the ultimate powers of our Government, then, when the question arises as to what powers we should give the President, the Congress is performing its proper function and proper duty when it decides which powers are to be conferred upon the President and what powers are to be denied to him. It is just very probable that the combined judgment of this body is better in that respect than the judgment of the President. It is only human nature for a man facing a serious emergency to desire more power than it is wise or expedient to grant to him.

I have no criticism whatever of the President when he asks for the powers that he has sought. I am sure that the President asks for those powers because he thinks they are required to carry the present operation in Korea through successfully and to meet any other crises which may arise. At the same time, I think we have the duty and obligation to decide these questions ourselves. That is exactly what we have been doing during the past few days. Instead of being a travesty, it is a fine exhibition of the Congress and its Members performing their proper functions. I think the conclusions that have been reached by this body have strengthened the bill and will strengthen the position of the President of the United States, if and when the bill is finally passed in substantially its present form.

The gentleman from New York referred to the credit provisions of the act and said that they freed real-estate credit. As a matter of fact, the provisions on real estate in this bill at the present speaking are exactly the same as they are in the committee bill because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan on credit only went to the general credit provisions and not to the real-estate provisions at all.

Mr. Chairman, I want to divorce this question completely from one of personalities. I have confidence in the President of the United States. I do not think he is a man who is particularly grasping for power. But, at the same time, the man who now occupies the office of the Presidency of the United States may not be there forever, no matter what your opinion of him. That same power may reside in someone else. Once power is acquired, it is never easy for mortal man to give it up voluntarily.

I say to you of the opposite political faith it may be in the hands of a Republican in 1952. The question is, Are we to transfer the power, and how much power; not to whom is the power to be transferred. It is the duty of the Congress to meet that situation. I think the President has asked for too much power in some respects, but not enough in other directions. I do want to call your attention to the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] referred to taking property when we are sending the boys overseas. Actually, there has been no amendment offered or adopted so far which changes in any material way the President's request or the committee bill in respect to priorities, allocations, or requisitions. All we are trying to do in the credit provision is to give the President the power which he now needs over credit, but to reserve the ultimate power so that it can be decided upon later, if and when there might be a real need for such action.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. No; not at this time. I think the President has asked for too much power. I think we should cut him down. I think we should select what phases of power we should grant him. If the bill were passed in its present form, under the present circumstances, we will be giving him more power than a good man would want and more power than a bad man should have. So let us exercise our selective judgment. Let us not just come in here and say, "We are in a tight spot. We would like to get out of it. So, as Members of Congress, we are going to shed our responsibility. We are going to turn this all over to the President, and then, if anything happens, we can say, 'It will be your fault, and not ours.'" Let us stand up and meet our obligation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOLEY: On pages 44, 45, and 46, strike out all of section 411.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Members of this House are not confused, but as I have listened to the debate on this bill, I am actually beginning to wonder. Certainly, this is no time for bewilderment. It is a time for clear thinking and forthright action.

Many Members of this House appear to be somewhat confused about our international situation and somewhat uncertain about just what is going on in Korea. Yesterday an able Member of this House made a speech, which he began by saying, "We are not technically at war." This morning several other Members made speeches indicating great uncertainty regarding our situation in Korea. They were apparently timid about calling it war and seemed to prefer to refer to it as some sort of police action. This is no time for uncertainty, and surely this is no time for hypocrisy, and it is no time for us to be deluding ourselves. All of us must know that we are actually and technically at war. Our countrymen are fighting and dying every hour of the day and the night. If we are not technically at war, pray tell me by what right doth the President of this country, the Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces, send the youth of this Nation 7,000 miles from their homes and firesides to fight, to bleed, and to die in a foreign land? Whatever the exact character of the conflict, the fact remains that it is a battle to the death.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. If we are not technically at war, when did we sign a peace treaty with Germany and Japan?

Mr. COOLEY. I was just going to point that out. Certainly, we are technically at war, because the documents of peace have never been drafted or the terms of peace agreed upon. The North Koreans have not invaded the territorial integrity of this country or any of its possessions, but they have violated a trusteeship which we are exercising in that part of the world. We need not deceive ourselves by wishful thinking. We are at war.

Mr. JENSEN. And a shooting war.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes, a shooting war in which men are being maimed and murdered. Yet we sit here and seem to think that we are engaged in a kind of "police action". Certainly my son is not a policeman nor is he a member of a police force. Neither is your son, and sons of other Americans who are now getting ready for the eventualities of a war which is being waged seven or eight thousand miles from home. We liberated Korea from the onslaught of Japan. The partition of Korea is one of the great tragedies of history but south of the thirty-eighth parallel we have a responsibility which we may not honorably shirk. Let us face up to the fact: This is no police action. It is nothing short of war.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman discuss his amendment? I am very much interested in his amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes, I shall be very glad to discuss the amendment I have offered. I apologize for trespassing upon your patience with observations concerning Korea.

There is nothing in the Korean situation which has prompted the request for the power which this bill seeks to confer upon the President to control margins on commodity exchanges. This power was requested more than a year ago, long before we even dreamed of the conflict in Korea. Out of respect for the Secretary of Agriculture's wishes, I introduced a bill which would have, among other things, granted this power to fix margins. Hearings have been held, investigations and studies have been made, but the bill has not been reported. I am not complaining because the matter has been summarily taken away from the legislative committee to which it was properly referred but I do object to the emergency being used as an excuse for requesting this control over commodity exchanges. I am not talking about jurisdiction; I am discussing the merits and demerits of the proposition involved. Neither the President, nor the Secretary of Agriculture, nor any other official of the Executive Branch of the Government has ever had the authority over the commodity exchanges which this bill seeks to confer. The authority is not needed and should not be granted. There is nothing in recent transactions to warrant this unwarranted demand for power.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Furthermore, in the Committee of the Whole the gentleman's amendment was sustained by a 2-to-1 vote. Can the gentleman explain to me why the Committee on Banking and Currency persisted in putting it back in the bill?

Mr. COOLEY. I regret very much that I cannot explain it. After the Committee of the Whole acted the other day I thought certainly that the Committee on Banking and Currency would accept this amendment and completely eliminate section 411 from the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I supported the gentleman's amendment when it was first considered, striking out section 411. I introduced an amendment and it was adopted to the effect that the section should not apply to bona fide hedging transactions. I found afterwards that it would not do the job. We met the other day. As the gentleman stated we passed this amendment on the floor the other day by a 2-to-1 vote. In our committee on yesterday we had a tie vote on this amendment, 12 to 12. The other body gave about three times as much consideration to this bill as we have, and they struck out section 411. I do not think it ought to be in this bill. I think the gentleman is correct. It was given consideration both here and in the other body, more consideration in the other body than we have given it, and it was rejected.

I hope the gentleman's amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COOLEY. I thank the gentleman very much.

I should just like to say in concluding that I wish I had time to discuss the merits of this amendment fully. I am not proposing it as a farmer; I am not proposing it merely because I happen to be chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House; certainly, I am not proposing it to protect gamblers.

Some gentleman called these people who speculate or trade on these markets gamblers. I am not conscious of the fact that they are gamblers. The mere fact that he says they are gamblers does not make them gamblers. Let me say this: If these commodity exchanges were cesspools of crime, if in these exchanges crime flourishes, if they are vortexes of vice and dens of iniquity, then we ought not to regulate them; we should not try to control them; we should lock them up and outlaw them. But I can prove by the Secretary's own language that they are needed in the orderly marketing of our agricultural commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. The Secretary's letter clearly indicates that hedging, bona fide hedging, is desirable. He frankly admits that speculation is necessary if you are going to have bona fide hedging. He complains only about excessive speculation. What is execessive speculation? He does not know any better than you or I. I can prove by the records of the Commodity Exchange Administration that the smallest price increases have occurred on commodities on which there has been the greatest volume of trading.

Notwithstanding the record, the Department of Agriculture is apparently frightened by the volume of trading; yet the record discloses no cause for fear. The volume of trading on eggs was up about 128 percent, but the price of eggs went up only about 5 percent. Even though the price of eggs did advance slightly, eggs have not reached the support-price level and the Commodity Credit Corporation is at this very moment buying eggs by the thousands of dozens. Why? Because the egg price has not reached parity, and yet we are complaining because somebody has said there is speculation in eggs.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not a fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation, as stated yesterday very ably by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has vast quantities of almost all of the commodities which are traded on the exchanges? The very fact of that Government ownership will in itself prevent any wild speculation in those commodities either on or off the exchange.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is right. Furthermore, if we have price ceilings on these commodities why do you want to close up the commodity exchanges?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not true that the adoption of the gentleman's amendment will serve the purpose of continuing the present orderly procedure with respect to agricultural products?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. The purpose of this legislation is to prevent excessive price increases, is it not?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. POAGE. Has not the gentleman as a farmer, as one who has lived in a farm country heard all his life from every farmer in the country the complaint that the futures market kept the price down?

Mr. COOLEY. That is the farmers' complaint.

Mr. POAGE. Has that not been the consistent complaint for 50 years, that the futures market kept the price down? Are we to destroy a thing that has been keeping the price down at the very time that our sole purpose is to keep the prices down?

Mr. COOLEY. No. May I say that the businessmen of this country trade on these markets. They protect their inventories.

Let me sum up by saying that the complaint is made about volume of business. If you life the margins and drive out the numerous thousands upon thousands of little traders on these exchanges, then it is clear to see that the trading will be done by a comparatively few people. Then one large transaction will have such an impact upon the market that you will see wild market fluctuations and gyrations, and futures trading will be monopolized and in the hands of a very few people.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. I have the utmost confidence in the gentleman and in those who take the same position that he does with respect to this amendment. I respect the motives that prompted the gentleman to offer the amendment. I would like to have the gentleman explain the provision in the amendment. The provision he is seeking to strike out is aimed only at traders who are gamblers.

Mr. COOLEY. Who are the gamblers? The gentleman continually uses the expression "gamblers."

Mr. MULTER. But will you keep out of speculating on the commodity exchanges those men who have nothing to do with any of the commodities traded in, but simply go in and buy the futures and gamble?

Mr. COOLEY. How can you ever hedge? How can you ever sell unless you have somebody to buy? These people go in and they buy and sell. I can prove to you by the records of the commodity exchanges that these speculations that the gentleman is talking about do not materially or substantially influence the price that the farmers receive or that the ultimate consumers pay.

Mr. MULTER. Explain to us how you can keep those who are not legitimate traders out of the commodity exchanges and stop them from gambling without this provision in the bill?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman has these exchanges in his own city. I cannot explain to you in a few minutes what my committee has learned in 12 months, during which time we have sent members to New Orleans, Chicago, New York, and every place else.

You refer to the traders on these exchanges as gamblers. Who are the gamblers, and who are the righteous citizens? If bona fide hedging is to be permitted, and if speculation in some degree is legitimate, then where shall we draw the line between vice and virtue? Who shall select the malefactor and who shall designate the honest man? This is nothing but a grasp for power. Yes, the power of life and death over an American business institution which has been permitted to operate through many long years, both in times of war and in times of peace. If the commodity exchanges should be abolished, if they exercise an evil influence and serve no good purpose, why not kill them outright and banish them from American life? Certainly no one—not even those who request the power to control—would in forthright fashion advocate closing these exchanges. I wish that time would permit me to discuss this proposition more fully, but I must conclude. In concluding, however, I want to emphasize the fact that commodity exchanges are now regulated by Federal law and are cautiously supervised. Those who would do evil must be very cautious or they will be caught and prosecuted.

I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, there is a fifth column busily at work in our country. I refer to the greedy war profiteers and price gougers who have made it mandatory that we impose price controls now.

These unprincipled profiteers who are squeezing profits out of the blood of our brave GI's should be branded as traitors. From my observation the people of this country are far ahead of the Congress. They are demanding strict controls on prices and wages and with these they demand tighter controls on credit and an excess-profits tax.

If steadily rising inflation is not to seriously hinder our defense effort during the present emergency, a system of credit controls must be adopted at once.

This is the only alternative to a system of general price controls on commodities, wages, and rents which would create great discombort among the American people and which would make necessary the lengthy procedure of setting up a vast bureaucracy for the administration of these price controls.

The preferred method of control at this time is the immediate institution of credit controls which can take effect immediately. Credit controls would serve to relieve the inflationary pressure which has come into being during the present national emergency. If steps are not taken to control credit and to channel the flow of scarce materials and manpower away from the production of consumer goods, our national defense effort will be seriously hindered. We cannot permit competition for scarce commodities between producers of consumer goods and producers of goods for our national defense to create inflation and to divert scarce commodities away from the defense effort. The pressure put upon our economy by over-expansion of consumer purchasing power must be relieved. The institution of credit controls would serve to relieve this pressure effectively and immediately.

Consumer credit controls have been shown by the experience of World War II to be useful and desirable when the economy is straining, as it is now, to provide the things required by consumers and by national security operations. When an economy is working at nearly full speed as ours is at the present time, and is required both to shift kinds of production and further to expand, then consumer credit controls have a number of useful results.

First. They restrain price increases of durable and semidurable commodities; the market for such commodities is sensitive to credit terms, and requirements of more cash outlay for down payments and larger current monthly payments, as maturity dates are shortened, restrain bidding up of prices.

Second. The elimination of rapid and large price increases, of the commodities which require the materials that are needed also for national security operations, contributes directly to the prosecution of the security operations.

(a) The operations are made cheaper, consumer credit controls making it possible for the military to outbid civilians more readily. The Nation gains in reduced armament costs, which necessitates less tax and debt increases than would occur if credit were not controlled.

(b) The operations are made more effective because the greatly increased procurement of materials and supplies and finished armament "hardware" is not impeded by reluctance of suppliers to turn away from civilian markets; the civilian markets are limited, rather than offering uncontrolled possibilities of extraordinary profits.

(c) The need for direct controls, such as allocations, priorities, rationing, is lessened, allowing more freedom to the whole population than would be possible if unlimited scare buying and hoarding were to force the Nation to impose such controls now. The savings in administrative manpower, and the savings in time of consumers and businessmen are great and important considerations when the economy is expanding to meet new demands for production.

Third. Consumer credit controls make other controls more workable. Controls such as on other lending, heavier taxes, and so on, which are intended to hold down prices as well as to aid war preparations, will be more effective when consumer demand is restricted by credit controls applied to durable and semidurable goods and to charge accounts on other merchandise.

Fourth. Consumers are protected against incurring indebtedness which would prove extremely burdensome to themselves, and are required to purchase sanely and within their resources.

The justification for controlling consumer credit is to be found in these consequences of such control.

The justification is to be found also in this fact: The credit granting possibilities of sellers and lenders are enormous, as a result of years of prosperity; no restriction on consumers could be expected to come voluntarily from sellers. The restrictions must be placed on purchasers, whose resources are limited, when the resources of lenders are so great that control over bank credit to which they might have recourse would not seriously limit their lending capacity.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that the National Retail Dry Goods Association has endorsed credit control. Here I wish to read excerpts from an article appearing in the New York Times August 4, 1940:

RETAILERS ENDORSE CONTROL OF CREDIT—NRDGA GROUP ALSO URGES STUDY OF CAR, OTHER FINANCING COMPARED WITH STORES—ALSO FAVORS ADDED CURBS—ASKS RESTRICTIONS ON PRICES, WAGES, MANPOWER, OUTPUT WHEN NECESSARY

Consumer credit controls were endorsed yesterday by the emergency government controls committee of the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Lack of progress on a national civilian defense program was also regarded as a matter for serious alarm. Until the Government takes a firm stand, State and local efforts will be ineffectual, it was held.

Predominant among recommendations made by the committee was a request that Government agencies make another survey of outstanding consumer credit to determine percentages now extended by retail stores, compared with automobile financing, personal loans, and other forms of credit.

POSITION ON CONTROLS

The committee further recommended that price, wage, production, and manpower controls be imposed if and when necessary. The NRDGA represents about 7,500 department and specialty stores in the country.

"Under this type of regulation," the committee said, "prices would be absolutely controlled in dollars on all items that were to be kept in line at retail levels. And in instances where the price-control authority permitted increased prices at preretail levels, the individual retailer's mark-up would be consistent."

The retail group felt that present mobilization is not yet large enough to make an appreciable dent on civilian supplies. Credit controls, it was added, should be confined to installment selling, exclusive of items selling below $100, much in the same manner as provided under Regulation W.

Returning to a discussion of prices, it was recommended that they extend to all levels affecting the goods so controlled including raw materials, agricultural commodities, wages, and other costs." It was also emphasized that merchandise in lower-price ranges should be maintained.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, those opposed to this legislation argue that there is no need for authority to curb futures speculation by means of adequate margin requirements because there was no such authority during World War II. The answer to that is perfectly obvious. Price ceilings—rigid controls—which were in effect during the war stopped futures trading in many commodities and so reduced the volume in the others that there was no threat to our economic stability.

In proposing controls in this legislation during the present emergency, it is hoped that we may be able to avoid the far-reaching radical steps, the obnoxious steps of rationing and price ceilings. If traders are willing to accept moderate and reasonable curbs, such as this proposed margin regulation does, and nothing more than that, we may reasonably hope that in order to avoid more rigid restrictions it will not be necessary to move into that area.

I would just like to point out, without the opportunity to have a chart here, what has happened to seven commodities so far as volume of trading is concerned in the 10-year period before the war, the 4-year period during the war, the period of 4 years after the war, and the estimate for 1950 and 1951, based upon the June 1950 trading figures.

The seven commodities I have selected are: wheat, soy beans, cotton, wool tops, eggs, cottonseed oil, and lard.

Mr. RANKIN. Why did the gentleman leave out corn and put wool tops in?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I merely selected these items because of the situation in volume of futures trading in these commodities.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman left out corn. Outside of cotton that is the greatest commodity we produce, the most abundant.

Comparison of volume of futures trading in principal commodities before, during, and after World War II, and estimate of volume for the year 1950–51 based on actual volume in July 1950

	Before 10-year average 1932–42 (prewar)	During 4-year average 1942–46 (war)	After 4-year average 1946–50 (postwar)	Estimate for year 1950–51 (current)
Wheat, million bushels	8,162.7	2,311.0	4,202.0	6,109.2
Soybeans, million bushels	292.7	4.0	1,289.0	4,425.6
Cotton, thousand bales	52,993.0	45,018.0	84,228.0	82,296.0
Wool tops, million pounds	54.1	37.6	37.9	867.6
Eggs, car lots	43,254.0	33,794.0	102,118.0	118,908.0
Cottonseed oil, million pounds	1,939.4	13.0	2,301.8	8,350.8
Lard, million pounds	1,371.1	6.7	2,018.0	5,680.8

Mr. BUCHANAN. As far as wheat is concerned, in terms of millions of bushels, the average volume of futures trading amounted to about eight thousand million bushels. During the war that dropped to some two thousand million, and in the postwar period to four thousand million bushels, and the current period is running at about six thousand million bushels.

Soybeans is a very illustrative case. Before the war it was down around 292,700,000 bushels; during the war that dropped down to 4,000,000 bushels, and in the postwar period to about 1,289,000,000 bushels, and today about 4,425,600,000 bushels of soybeans.

Now, take eggs. The average carload lots in the period before the war amounted to 43,254 carload lots, during the war to 33,794 carload lots, in the postwar period 102,118 carload lots, and in the present period about 118,908 carload lots.

Now, what do these figures indicate? They indicate there is coming into the commodity market a new group of speculators and not the legitimate traders. But here is an opportunity, as many see it, to speculate in this period on the present margin basis, because the margin requirements average between 8 and 16 percent; in other words, for an average of about $10,000 you can buy $100,000 worth of commodities on the futures trading market. Therefore, you are inviting speculation, and those who have analyzed the futures trading on the commodity exchanges say that 90 percent of the current trading is purely speculative.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to this request for further time, but I am going to object to any further requests for extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I said, 90 percent of the present trading volume has been regarded and analyzed as speculative. The Wall Street Journal takes the position that any reduction in the number of buyers and sellers will hinder the exchanges in the performance of their useful functions. Actually, in the case of some commodities, these exchanges are not now performing any useful function, as I pointed out in the case of soybeans. So far as hedging is concerned, they offer no legitimate use or value for hedging purposes, and they have made that market useless for hedging purposes.

Many traders and brokers are alarmed at the influx of new speculators into the commodity exchanges. We know what happened during the latter years of twenties, when the securities crash in 1929 was brought on purely by trading in the securities market. We know that that helped to destroy security values during the 1929–33 period. The same thing can happen here as far as speculation in the commodity exchanges is concerned. In order to try to avoid that same kind of a demise, the President has asked for powers here to control margin requirements; that is, to be able to impose certain margin requirements and to raise them as to a particular commodity that seemingly indicates a very extreme speculative position. This is very necessary to block speculation from getting out of hand.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Did the President have that power during World War II?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He did not. It is needed today because the nature of our economy has changed. Ten years ago the situation was different than it is today. The figures that I have outlined, for periods before the war, during the war, and after the war, show one condition, but today we have a very different type of condition in our economy.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman's argument is entirely in support of the peacetime exercise of this authority, just as the Secretary himself stated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The figures I have read to this body indicate that these are normal, average transaction figures today. These are above what the normal prewar, during-the-war, and postwar period figures were. They are far in excess of what they are normally.

It is foolish to talk of voluntary control of speculation. Of course the brokers of this country feel that the more speculation we have the better, because it means increased business for them.

The powers asked for in this bill, credit controls and margin requirements on the commodity exchanges, are the two vital steps whereby we can control the present situation at the top rather than at the lower level. We want to avoid as far as possible rationing and controls at the consumer levels, because the experience we had in World War II shows that these were none too successful. Anyone who would admit that they were even 50 percent successful would be very kind. The same situation will exist again. In order to avoid that, the President is asking for the powers that he deems necessary to control the situation. This body wants to give him powers he did not ask for as far as wage and price controls and rationing are concerned.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman says it is necessary to control the commodities he has mentioned.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The margin requirements.

Mr. JENSEN. Yes. Is it not a fact that the test of the gentleman's argument is this, that none of these commodities the gentleman has mentioned has risen in price to any great degree?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The same kind of comparison will indicate that in these particular commodities there has been unwarranted price rises in the wholesale commodity markets. We know that an increase in wholesale commodity prices precedes an increase in the price of commodities on the consumer level. In between, of course, we have this question of profiteering and taking advantage of the consumer. Our purpose is to protect the consumers.

Mr. JENSEN. But prices are still holding at parity, approximately.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Cooley amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I will have to object to that.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Cooley amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

(By unanimous consent, the time allotted to Mr. BROWN of Georgia was granted to Mr. HAYS of Arkansas.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

(By unanimous consent, the time allotted to Messrs. SPENCE, PATMAN, and MULTER was given to Mr. MONRONEY.)

(Mr. MONRONEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, we are going to make the Congress look a little bit funny if after having regulated every single small business in the country and all labor in the country with over-all price controls, the rigidity of which will probably have all the force and effect of the recent OPA laws, we then exempt the one thing that the country believes is the spark plug of inflation—commodity speculation. I do not think you have to be halfway smart to realize that when war is imminent you are going to find violent fluctuations in the commodity markets, and that those fluctuations inevitably are going to carry your prices to new high levels.

We are going to be able to have a roll-call vote on this amendment. If you are willing to stand up and be counted that you are for speculation in the foodstuffs of America, which is raising the cost of living to the people of this country, then you have a chance to go on record in favor of this amendment. But if you want to make the controls, if they are necessary to be applied, go clear across the board on the big people as well as on the little people, then vote to strike down this amendment.

I am surprised to see the members of the Committee on Agriculture defending speculation in commodities which is taking the prices up and up to new high levels.

I have talked to the farmers in Oklahoma. They realize that it is not the farmers who make money on this speculation, but the men who go into the market and drive these prices up.

What does this bill do? It does not do what the debate here says it will do. It merely places in the President power to regulate margins when he determines that the nature and extent of speculative trading threatens to cause unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity.

Is that too much power to give the President in this emergency?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

(By unanimous consent, the time allotted to Mr. COLE of Kansas, Mr. BATES of Massachusetts, and Mr. MORTON was granted to Mr. HOPE.)

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], for whom I have a high regard, has just stated that we would look foolish if we regulated other businesses and took no steps to regulate the commodity exchanges.

Of course, the gentleman from Oklahoma as well as every other Member of this House knows that the commodity exchanges are now strictly regulated by law. In 1922 Congress enacted the Grain Futures Act and in 1936 this act was amended and revised by what is known as the Commodity Exchange Act which is now in effect. Under this act which is administered by the Secretary of Agriculture through the Commodity Exchange Authority there is a very strict and effective supervision of all transactions on the commodity exchange. This act has been well administered. It has done away with abuses which prevailed in the commodity exchanges before its enactment and has made those exchanges what they were intended to be and should be, namely, an agency through which those who are engaged in the marketing and processing of agricultural commodities can effectively insure themselves against price declines and advances. The effect of this has been to stabilize commodity prices, reduce the profit margins of dealers and processors and insure producers a ready market for their products at all times. Anyone who doubts the effectiveness of the exchanges in bringing about a more effective marketing system needs only to compare our marketing methods and practices as they exist today with those which were in existence 50 or 60 years ago.

The Secretary of Agriculture has never had the authority to regulate or fix margins on the commodity exchanges. These margins, of course, are imposed for the purpose of protecting brokers and dealers on the exchange and making sure that those who make contracts of purchase or sale will carry them out. The exchanges themselves frequently regulate and change the margins from time to time based upon what may be necessary in order to fully protect those who operate on the exchanges.

From time to time the Secretary of Agriculture has suggested further amendments to the Commodity Exchange Act and has made an effort to secure authority to limit margins. Something over a year ago the Secretary of Agriculture sent to the House and Senate through official channels a bill to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, one of the provisions of which was the authority to limit margins. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. Since its introduction the committee has given this measure considerable study and discussion including visits to the commodity exchanges in New York, Chicago, Kansas City, and New Orleans. The committee at this time has not finished its study of the matter. It is still under consideration however.

The inclusion of section 411 in the Spence bill, H. R. 9176, is not justified on the basis of any need for this authority but simply represents an attempt on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Commodity Exchange Authority to secure under the guise of emergency legislation authority which the Congress has not yet seen fit to give them. I am sure that whenever the Commodity Exchange Authority makes out an effective case showing the need for authority to deal with margins the Committee on Agriculture will report legislation for that purpose.

There is nothing in the situation at this time which would justify granting the authority requested. Those who favor the proposal point out that prices of some commodities which are dealt in on the exchanges have risen during the past few weeks. They point out that in some cases there has been an increase in the volume of trading. This morning the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] as I understood him, divided transactions in the exchanges into three different periods: those for a period preceding World War II, those during World War II, and those since that time. He pointed out that there has been a considerable increase in the number and volume of transactions on the exchanges since the World War II period. This is to be expected because agricultural production in this country has increased by more than 35 percent since the beginning of World War II. And in order to handle this increased production, all of which has to go to market at one time or another, it is natural that there should be a substantial increase in the business of the exchanges.

For this reason the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania have no relevance from the standpoint of showing any need for additional powers to the commodity exchange authority at this time.

On August 3 when this matter was under consideration the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POLK] placed in the RECORD a statement from Mr. J. M. Mehl, Administrator of the Commodity Exchange Authority. This statement was offered as showing the need for authority to limit margins, it being contended that there had been an increase in activity on the exchanges since the Korean war began and that this had resulted in increased prices. It is true that since the Korean war broke out there have been some increases in prices of the commodities which are traded upon in the exchanges. It is true also that there have been much greater increases in the prices of commodities which are not traded upon in the exchanges such as lumber and many of the metals. It is significant also that in many cases the commodities upon which there has been the greatest increase in trading show the smallest price advances since June 24. For instance it is stated in this document that from June 26 to July 22 there was a 78-percent increase in the volume of futures trading in wheat over the preceding 4-week period. It is noteworthy however that during this time the increase in the price of wheat was only 6.6 percent.

During the same period there was an increase of 9.3 percent in the volume of futures trading in cotton on the New York Cotton Exchange and a decrease of 4.9 percent in the amount of trading on the New Orleans Exchange. During the same period however the price of cotton advanced 19.1 percent. In other words there was an increase of 19 percent in the price of cotton during the period which was accompanied by a very small increase in the volume of activity on the exchange, whereas with respect to wheat just the reverse was true.

In both cases the price changes are susceptible of explanation for entirely different reasons than trading on the exchanges. For instance, the increase in the price of cotton was due very largely, if not entirely, to the announcement that the acreage of cotton planted this year was the smallest for many years. The increase in the volume of trading on wheat was due to the fact that it is this period during and following harvest when there is usually the largest amount of trading in cash wheat due to purchases by mills and exporters. That has been particularly true this year. Naturally since all of these purchases must be hedged this rusults in an increase in the volume of trading.

If time permitted one could deal with all the commodities mentioned in this statement by Mr. Mehl and clearly show that there was little, if any, relationship between the volume of trading and the increase or decrease of market prices.

There are those who say that they recognize the value of the commodity exchanges, but they want to limit transactions to legitimate hedging. That, Mr. Chairman, is something which it is impossible to do without running the risk of seriously affecting the functioning of the exchanges. The reason for this is that legitimate hedgers must depend upon speculators if they are to hedge effectively.

Take the case of wheat. During the present marketing season millers and exporters are buying wheat. They hedge by selling wheat. But the only persons with whom they can contract are the speculators because the number of legitimate hedgers who might be hedging sales at this time of year is very small. If I as a miller buy a million bushels of wheat, then if I am to hedge that purchase by selling a million bushels, there must be a sufficient number of speculators on the market to take up my hedge at once. Otherwise I am not able to effectively insure myself against price declines.

There is no man in this country who is smart enough to know what the effect of increasing margins will be on the commodity exchanges. There is no one who is smart enough to know just what volume of trade should be allowed to insure the effectiveness of the exchanges as an agency to insure prices. I have great respect for the Secretary of Agriculture and for the Administrator of the Commodity Exchange Authority. But I question their ability to exercise the authority which is being asked in this legislation without seriously impairing the functioning of the exchanges.

The exchanges should be regulated so as to prevent manipulation of prices and other abuses which prevailed in the past. They are now being effectively regulated under existing law. I do not say that the law is perfect or that it should not be amended upon further consideration. But I do say that no case has been made out at this time for giving the President, and through him the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Commodity Exchange Authority, this great power. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will prevail.

[Mr. WHITE of California addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER].

(Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, if prices are our worry, and all of you know as well as I do that they are, let us recognize that they can be kept from skyrocketing only by taking some of the powder out of the fuse. The way to do that is to give the President the power to control the margins of the profiteering speculators, who are forcing up prices.

The section under discussion sets up very explicit Presidential powers and I see nothing in them to evoke any false alarms. Let me quote:

> Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required.

It is as simple and as direct as that.

Price inflation has already begun, begun under the impact of a horde of shoestring operators entering a market with the smallest of margins and perverting its purpose from ordinary free exchange of goods to the wildest kind of speculation.

In a check by the Department of Agriculture on July 21, 90 to 95 percent of all trading done on commodity exchanges was speculation. Of all the soy beans traded on that day, 96 percent of purchases were on speculation and 90 percent of the sales on speculation. You can see how little regular exchange of goods was done that day.

And why this flood of speculation. Because you can trade in soybeans on just 6 percent of margin under the present regulations of the Chicago Board of Trade. Penny-ante profiteers who never touched the soybean trade in their lives before are risking their pennies to make dollars in the soybean market—and eventually from the pockets of consumers. Unless we leave intact this commodity-control provision, the public will soon get added evidence of the price boosts forced by these profiteers in the necessities of life.

Now the soybean market is not a great exception, it is simply a notable example of what is taking place in the other commodity markets without the restraining influence of controls. Wheat, as basic a commodity as our economy knows, was also checked on July 21. Its volume of trading was 9,000,000 bushels in 1 day—no one could call that ordinary free exchange of wheat. The Department of Agriculture breakdown revealed that more than 80 percent of both sales and purchases were for purely speculative purposes.

What do some of the well-established traders think of this situation? They think present margins are inadequate. Many of them ignore the minimum margins of 6 to 15 percent on commodities as being unwise and encouraging speculation. They demand—and get—20 to 25 percent margins, to protect themselves and the public. Yes; and ultimately the speculators themselves.

Let us remember this: Today there is no Government regulation of gambling on the commodity exchanges. We are asking to have Government regulation imposed so the President may have that power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, the impassioned statement made by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] shows that he does not know anything about the commodity market or the merchandising of farm products.

The commodity futures market is a public market regulated by the Commodity Exchange Authority, which is an agency within the Department of Agriculture. This agency, under complete jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, has full authority to police every transaction and every trade in commodity future contracts. The Secretary also has the authority to examine every account involving future trading in commodities. If excessive speculation takes place, the Secretary, through the CEA can do something about it, if he so desires. The gentleman from Wisconsin, who claims to be well posted on every subject, should find out as to the workings of the Department of Agriculture.

If the Committee follows the advice of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] the control over commodity exchanges will be turned over to the large speculators of the country, and they will dominate, at their pleasure, the prices that farmers will receive for their products. I know something about the magnitude of the operations of the big speculators from the investigation that was conducted by a select committee in the Eightieth Congress. Believe me, the big boys, and the amount of the margins make no difference to them, are out to make money—from either the long or short side. With their large holdings, they drive the market up or down to suit their fancy, and the farmers and the public are left holding the bag. I regret that time will not permit me to go into greater detail on this issue.

At some time in the future, I will fully discuss the legitimate use of the commodity market for insurance or hedging purposes. The Committee on Agriculture of the House has jurisdiction over legislation involving commodity markets. This committee, with its broad marketing experience should pass on the question of margins and speculative trading, instead of disposing of the matter in a few minutes time in the bill before the House. The Cooley amendment should be adopted, and I urge my colleagues to vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I merely rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The exchanges are the one assurance the farmer has that he will be able to get information at all times as to the prices of his crops.

In 1927 I investigated the cotton exchange for the Senate committee. They swore me in as a member to cross-examine the head of a certain big cotton concern whose offense was not speculation. It was manipulation. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] should be adopted for the protection of the American farmer, who produces the materials that are bought and sold on the exchange.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

(Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for one-half minute.

(Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a matter of much regret that on account of debate being limited, Members of this House must run through the well of this house in 30 seconds like a cow being run through a dipping vat. In this limited time I can only say that I voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina last week, and I shall vote for it again today.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] is recognized.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I was brought up to fear certain commodity exchange practices, but largely because the effect of the practices was to depress prices. In this instance I am convinced that we are in danger of oversimplifying the problem. It is not an inflation influence requiring treatment in this bill. The Secretary of Agriculture has all the powers he needs to deal with such influences; he has the huge supply of cotton and other commodities in storage that may be sold and he has other powers that may be used.

There is, however, a policing element in the situation; and for the same reason that I voted against the motion to include an excess profits tax which I favor I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], in this instance. It does not belong in this bill. We cannot tie all reforms up in one package. If there are immoral, and undesirable practices, gambling if you please, let those matters be considered appropriately in separate bills. Let us not do it by a bungling effort of this type—giving the executive powers that might be the basis for upsetting the most delicate mechanism in our whole economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 140, noes 103.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 47, line 24, add a new subsection as follows:

"(c) The term 'national defense' means the operations and activities of the Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, my amendment speaks for itself and would apply the same definition of "national defense" to all of the provisions of the act as is applied to the committee amendment which was adopted yesterday, known as Committee Print No. 2, having to do with prices and wages. Of course, it is the consistent thing to do.

If you have Committee Print No. 2 before you, you will find the language on page 21 which was adopted with that amendment as the definition of "national defense" wherever it appeared in that committee print which, as I say, had to do with the control of prices and wages.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee when it reported out its bill day before yesterday included this language and the language which was put in the House Banking and Currency Committee Print No. 2 was the language adopted by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate.

It would seem to me, just to be consistent, we should define "national defense wherever it appears in the act as we have defined it in respect to control of prices, salaries, and wages. Yesterday in the Committee on Banking and Currency when the amendment was offered, we were in somewhat of a hurry to get back over here on the floor. It was one of those occasions when everything was being knocked down in the interests of time and not in the interests of good legislation or clarity in respect to intent. If we do not adopt this amendment, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we will have created a situation where the intent of Congress in respect to the term "national defense" wherever it appears other than in the title having to do with wages, salaries, and prices might be given a different interpretation.

Now, it is not the intent of Congress or it should not be the intent of Congress that the term "national defense" would mean anything different in one section of the bill than it does in the other sections of the bill. It seems to me that by defining "national defense" as it applies generally to the bill, we remove any question of doubt; that we want the bill to be confined to the defense effort. And, it surely is in the interest of clear thinking and a clear expression of legislative intent if the amendment is adopted. I call attention again to the fact that it was written into the bill yesterday, which we adopted, and although it might seem redundant to do it again, the amendment which is offered on page 47 of the bill would apply to the whole bill and not only to the title on wages and prices alone.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Committee will adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 96, noes 89.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 133, noes 139.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MULTER: On page 52, line 12, after the words "omission to act", insert "pursuant to this act."

On line 20, after the word "general", add the words "and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

On page 53, line 2, after the word "general", add the words "and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

On line 3, after the word "thereunder", strike out the period and add the following: "and that if any objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President or such person as he may designate shall approve or disapprove the request."

On page 53, after line 7, add a new subsection as follows:

"(d) the Attorney General is directed to make or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and to the President within 90 days after the approval of this act and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized to state for the committee that we accept the amendment. It is an identical amendment to one which was adopted by the Committee previously.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

As I understand it, this is substantially if not identically the amendment which was offered successfully by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] last week.

Mr. MULTER. It contains the identical language of that amendment, and it is the same amendment which was discussed in committee and which the committee said it would accept. It is identical to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] last week which was adopted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYS of Arkansas: On page 49, line 5, substitute a comma for the period and add the following: "and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency."

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make it clear that in conferring authority upon the President to subpena papers or to secure documents and records, he shall not proceed if there is any existing available data in Federal agencies.

I have taken this up with both sides of the aisle, and I believe it will be found acceptable.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I think I can say that we on this side of the committee have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 38, line 2, after the words "real estate", insert the word "construction."

On page 38, line 22, after the words "real estate", insert the word "construction."

On page 39, line 3, after the word "any", insert "consumer or real estate construction."

On page 39, line 5, after the word "any", insert "such"; on line 8, after the word "any", insert "such"; on line 11, after the word "any", insert "such";

On page 41, line 23, strike out all of paragraph (2) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) 'Real estate construction credit' means any credit, hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term 'new construction' means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term 'real property' includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term 'real estate construction credit' shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized in support of his amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It is my understanding the gentleman's amendment restricts this section to new construction.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right. It is along the line that we talked the other day. The language on page 39 in subsection (b) of this amendment would confine the sanctions of the bill to consumer or real-estate construction credit. Then, the other amendments on that page are to tie it in with it and confine it to that kind of credit. The principal difference is we substitute the language that the Senate agreed on in committee, for the definition of real-estate credit on page 44 of the House amendment.

This will accomplish this purpose: It will assure control of real-estate credit on new construction. I might say very definitely to those who might subsequently charge that this is the real-estate lobby amendment that the real-estate lobby offered amendments, and this is not one of them. I will say that what we do under this language is to control real-estate credit in the same manner as we control consumer credit. The President at the present time, as head of the executive department, has authority to curtail the flow of real-estate credit for all purposes. As recently as 3 months ago the interest rates on real-estate loans guaranteed by the FHA were reduced from 4½ to 4¼ percent. It seems to me that before we give anyone of the authority to stop FHA insurance and Veterans' Administration home construction insurance altogether, we should at least encourage the use of the powers which are already in those acts to curtail construction under them.

It seems to me that before we give anyone the authority to destroy the programs which have been set up that they use the authority they now have to cut down on credit, to slow down construction if it is necessary in the interest of national defense.

Under the language of the bill as it was reported out, language for which this amendment is a substitute, the President would be given control over all real-estate operations in which a veteran has his loan insured; and I daresay, without fear of successful contradiction, that perhaps 90 percent of the homes which are being built for and purchased by veterans today are built under the veterans' bill-of-rights program, and I do not think it should be disturbed; I do not think it should be disturbed at least to the extent of granting anyone the authority to completely negative that program. Veteran's organizations have undoubtedly contacted you as they have me and have expressed the fear of what might happen to the veterans' home-building program if this is not done.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the real-estate lobby has been working furiously for weeks, and especially the last few days, for this type of amendment. I do not say that it is the amendment, I certainly would not impugn the motives of my good friend from Michigan, but it is this type of amendment that they have been working furiously for, for weeks, and especially the last few days.

This exempts the big man; this is the big man's amendment. Why should we impose controls on everybody and destroy character as collateral in buying a second-hand car or a new car and yet exempt the big fellow, the real-estate lobby? It certainly does not make sense to me. A vote for this amendment is a vote for increased rents; how much, I do not know, 25 percent, perhaps 50 percent, in some cases maybe 100 percent.

When you come to restrict credit only on new construction which will probably be half a million houses during the next year, if you restrict new construction you immediately and automatically increase the price of existing construction, 30,000,000 homes, whenever you increase the price of existing construction you increase the price of rents. This is not new; during the Second World War we first had controls on new automobiles and it did not apply to old automobiles, on the same theory that the gentleman from Michigan is advocating for this amendment, that in new cars there is only new material; in new houses there is only new materials; why make it apply to existing houses and not existing cars? So we exempted the old cars at first and we had the situation where the old cars were bringing several hundred dollars more than the new cars, and we had to change that. This will take the heart out of this bill; it will be in favor of the big man and against the interests of the little man. If we were to adopt this amendment, in order to be consistent we ought to go back and say that it applies only to new cars, does not apply to old cars; that would follow, of course. Cars are bought by little fellows as well as big ones; there is where your character comes in as good collateral. This bill destroys character as collateral in the interest of the war effort and we submit to it. Sometimes it is necessary for a person to own an automobile in order to have a job.

He cannot have a job unless he has a car. If he goes to a dealer, after this bill becomes law and regulation W is reestablished the dealer will say: "You will have to put up 33⅓ percent in cash." The poor man who has character says, "My credit has always been good. I have always paid my debts, I have never defaulted on a debt. I want to buy that car. I need it to get this job."

The dealer would have to say: "No; you cannot do that. Character is no longer good collateral in this country. You have got to put the actual money on the barrel head."

Now, we are requiring that man to do that in this bill, yet we come in here and exempt the big fellows, the big men, the fellows who will profit by this. It just does not make sense, and I hope that the amendment is overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, may I direct an inquiry to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN]. I have a telegram here from the Gloucester Fishing Vessel Owners' Association which states in part:

If there is to be a certain base period we wish to call to your attention the fact that there was a sea-food workers' strike in Gloucester this year during May, June, and part of July, and as a result the ex-vessel price of fish was considerably lower than normal. Very important that the base period be set at the price either before or after the strike. Please cooperate to take care of this situation because a May, June, or July base period would be ruinous.

During that period, Mr. Chairman, obviously with the fishing industry tied up by this sea-food strike, much of the fish was wasted and there was a depressed price for that which was sold.

I note in committee print No. 2, page 5, lines 18 to 24, it is stated in reference to the establishment of prices:

or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which they are generally representative.

Under these conditions are there adequate provisions to protect these fishermen and to give them an equitable price?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may say in reply to the gentleman that the language in committee print No. 2, page 5, beginning line 18, so far as the base period is concerned, provides for just such a situation as the gentleman has described in that telegram. The language is as follows:

or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative.

So I believe the part of the section there reading "or other cause" would adequately take care of the situation the gentleman has presented.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman very much for the clarification.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am wondering if a strike produces depressed prices or a scarcity. I come from New England also. I am wondering if our consumers and home owners, the wife who went out and bought fish, does pay a lower price than she would have to pay if a strike had been in progress, not a strike but if the disagreement had not been in progress.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. May I say to the distinguished majority leader that I am referring to the boat owners. They received an extremely low price. There were few cutters to cut the fish, and much of the fish was rotting on the boats, and as a result they did not get an adequate price. The consumers throughout the country, I have no doubt, probably had to pay high prices.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. MONRONEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, this is another move to make this bill just as lopsided as is possible to make it, make it lopsided in complete and total exemption, as far as the Congress can vote, in favor of those who control the credit facilities and, therefore, have unlimited freedom to expand those credit facilities and create inflation. You have exempted commodity speculation and now you want to exempt real estate from any kind of reasonable credit control which the President, through his agencies, might find necessary to put on to stop run-away real-estate speculation. It is no secret that a real-estate speculative market has a tremendous part in creating inflation.

The gentleman from Michigan has apparently determined that credit controls on new construction are all right. Well, if credit controls on new construction are all right for the man who does not have a home, does it not follow that the man who has a home or the real-estate developer that has 100 homes already built should be under the same kind of credit restrictions?

Can you say that a house that has been standing for 6 months or a year or 2 or 3 years is not in competition with new housing?

You know that the price of old housing will skyrocket. If you can sell that old house on down payments of 5 percent or 10 percent, it is going to skyrocket, if a man has to pay 30 percent or 40 percent down to buy a new house.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. This section does not attempt to control the price you can get.

Mr. MONRONEY. I know.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It only controls the down payment.

Mr. MONRONEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Does the gentleman think that a man who owned a home for 40 years should have the Government of this country say on what terms he should sell it?

Mr. MONRONEY. That is the point I was trying to make, that we have not and probably will not attempt any ceilings on the price of real estate. But, we do know that uncontrolled credit terms on real estate has a speculative influence that can carry the price of existing housing upward. If you try to hold down the construction of new homes by credit controls, which the gentleman from Michigan agrees to, then what is going to happen to your old homes? Exactly what happens when you try to hold down the terms on new cars and leave used cars uncontrolled on the credit side, because credit has as much to do with selling real estate or cars or appliances as the price itself.

I think we would be making the worst possible mistake to say that a house 1 year old can be sold for as low as 5 percent down, while a brand-new house has got to carry 30 percent or 20 percent down payment. You are going to get a lopsided bill, you are going to encourage skyrocketing of the prices on old housing. You are going to take out of the rental supply the old housing that exists, because if we have to have rent controls, then the price of this old housing will skyrocket, and if it can be sold for nothing down or 5 percent down, you know that the price of such housing is going up.

So it is going to disappear from the rental market, and go into that area of skyrocketing prices.

Nobody will intend to propose a ceiling on real estate prices. But, credit controls to me are just as important on used real estate as they are on new real estate. If credit control is sound to put on the little man needing a car, driving to a defense plant, to put it on his electric refrigerator or anything else, then I certainly do not think it is any violation of sound policy to make it apply to new and used real estate as well.

Mr. GUILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GUILL. Does the gentleman realize who controls the credit on the sale of a house?

Mr. MONRONEY. Certainly. There is no credit control at the present time.

Mr. GUILL. Yes; there is, sir. I want to explain this, that the lending agency will evaluate that housing; they are going to lend only so much that will assure them a return of the money. That will also control the price of it, sir.

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman is wrong, because the minute you have rigid credit controls on new housing you have inflation in the old housing, and then you will have an inflated evaluation. Loans will be based on this inflated value. It happened the last time; it will happen this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If this amendment is adopted, will rents not increase?

Mr. MONRONEY. Indeed, it will increase the demand for rental controls immediately if this amendment is adopted. This amendment will encourage the elimination of the rental housing supply because it would permit unsound credit extension for the sale of any used house.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS].

(Mr. REDDEN asked and was given permission to yield the time allotted to him to Mr. DAVIS of Georgia.)

(Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the provision here to which this amendment relates came before this House originally as part of the original committee bill, which provided only for allocations and priorities for the purpose of enabling the President to channel strategic materials into the war effort. We all remember that there was no provision in the original committee bill which dealt with price control or wage control. Price ceilings and wage control came in after the committee bill came to the floor of the House. Now the opponents of this amendment today are arguing on the theory that this real-estate credit is a part of the price-control angle of this bill, which it is not. It did not come in as a part of that feature of the bill at all. It came in as a part of the priorities and allocations bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of amending the present control provisions of this bill to eliminate the control of real-estate credit except new construction credit. If I should want to sell my house, I want to be able to do so without having to let some carpetbagging bureaucrat set the price. If I should want to buy another house, I want to be able to buy it without letting some carpetbagging bureaucrat set the price.

You give them authority in this bill to control all real-estate credit, and they will use this power to set the price and you will not be able to buy or sell unless you get an O. K. on the price as well as the terms. That is what can be done under this bill, if it is enacted without this amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. How in the world can they change the terms relating to all the buildings that have been constructed under the FHA law? You cannot afford to do that. And you cannot afford to do another thing. We already have a law setting up how much the down payment shall be under FHA loans. It looks to me as if this bill would disturb all that central field of housing, unless this amendment passes.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. The gentleman has correctly stated the situation.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. It has been argued here that it is not necessary to control in the price of real estate the terms under which it is sold. I assume, therefore, that the theory is that the terms might be too liberal and, therefore, permit the little man to buy too many pieces of property. Those who cry out to help the little man would in the same breath curb his ability to buy if they refuse to vote for this amendment, by saying to him, "We are going to require you to pay a given amount down," which would in most instances be more than he could pay. So I hope that this amendment is adopted.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the gentleman.

I am in favor of amending the credit-control provisions of this bill to eliminate control of real-estate credit except new construction credit.

As I have already said, if I should want to sell my house, I want to be able to do so without having to let some carpetbagging bureaucrat set the price. If I should want to buy another house, I want to be able to buy it without some carpetbagging bureaucrat fixing the price. Under the bill as it stands, without an amendment, this could happen. If we adopt a bill without such an amendment, I believe it will happen.

I therefore favor this amendment.

So far as price and wage control is concerned, the need of the country at the moment is for immediate relief from the price jumps which have occurred since June 25.

Section 2 of this bill does not provide that relief.

There is no need for complicated, bunglesome machinery which cannot be set up in less than 6 months, although some of the sponsors of section 2 of this bill claim that that is the minimum time which is needed to roll back prices that set up price-control machinery.

In my opinion that is bunk, pure and simple.

I had thought that when the Banking and Currency Committee went back into session over the week end, they would bring out a bill which would meet the needs of the day regarding price increases.

The bill which they have brought out, and which is now before us, does not give a particle of relief from the 30 cents a pound increase in the price of pork chops, the 21 cents a pound increase in the price of steak, the 30 cents per pound increase in the price of lamb chops, the 16 cents per pound increase in the price of coffee, the 10 cents per pound increase in the price of lard, the 24 cents per pound increase in price of chickens, and so on down the line.

Instead of giving practical and quick relief from unwarranted price increases, section II of this bill, which is the section dealing with prices, is a bunglesome effort to straddle the fence and does nothing to give relief to those who are being pinched by these unjustifiable price jumps.

This section II is just the beginning of another bureaucrat's paradise. The best provision in it is that which says that it expires on June 30, 1951. By that time I believe it will be obvious to everybody that this section II is just a fence-straddling, political hoax.

I believe that section I of this bill giving authority for allocations and priorities is needed to aid the war effort mobilization. Likewise, section IV, providing for control of credit is needed, with certain amendments, one of them being the real-estate amendment to which I have already referred.

If this monstrosity contained in section II were not attached to these sections which are needed to effect a quick, all-out, mobilization of materials for the war effort, and if it did not carry an automatic expiration date, I would not support the bill, at all.

The legislation on price and wage control which I have supported, and which I believe we should adopt, needs only four simple provisions:

First. A roll-back to June 25.

Second. A mandatory roll-back, with Congress assuming responsibility for it.

Third. Price and wage control tied together, to begin at the same time, and to be removed at the same time.

Fourth. An automatic expiration date on June 30, 1951.

The time has arrived for adoption of these provisions, and they are what we ought to adopt. If they are not needed now, then there is no excuse for a price- and wage-control law at all at this time.

With Congress in session, as we now are, and as we should continue to be, so long as the present war situation exists, there is no reason for us to enact a discretionary, stand-by, price-control law, passing the buck to the President, and requiring him to decide when price controls are necessary.

I say the decision is ours. We ought to make it, and we ought to make it now. It is our responsibility and we ought to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the other gentlemen recognized by the Chair were recognized for 2 minutes, should not the gentleman from New York be also recognized for 2 minutes, under the allotment of time?

The CHAIRMAN. The other gentlemen had longer time because time was yielded to them by others.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, if my recollection is correct, the Chairman originally recognized the other gentlemen for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the case, the Chair will be glad to recognize all gentlemen for 2 minutes, under the present limitation of time.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, yielded his time to Mr. MULTER.)

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, let us try to understand this real-estate credit provision for what it is. Let us understand, to begin with, that the present general monetary controls exercised by the Federal Reserve System are wholly inadequate to prevent excessive expansion of mortgage credit. Such existing general credit controls affect only the Federal Reserve member banks, and those banks hold less than 20 percent of the mortgage debt of the country. The other 80 percent of the mortgage debt is controlled by private institutions and private lenders. They are not controlled at all by the Federal Reserve System or by any law now in effect. The provisions of law applying to insured or guaranteed mortgages now being made by the Veterans' Administration and by the FHA apply to only 40 percent of the new building or new construction in the country. The other 60 percent is outside of those regulations. Unless you keep in this bill this real-estate-mortgage credit control, as reported by your committee, the market is going to run wild. In all fairness, you must not apply controls only to new construction and not apply them to existing buildings. Note that I do not say existing mortgages. There is nothing in this bill which is going to change the terms or the interest or the amortization payments of existing mortgages whether they be made by veterans or anybody else. This is to apply to new credit on real estate. There is nothing in this bill which says that you cannot buy a house for a thousand dollars or for $10,000. But it will apply to the amount of credit that you can get on your real-estate purchase or give on your real-estate sale. It will apply to the private lenders and to the insured lenders alike. There will be no discrimination between them.

In that manner you will be able to control the situation and not let it run away with itself.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It is my understanding that the other body after a long period of hearings adopted the exact amendment now being proposed by the gentleman from Michigan; is that correct?

Mr. MULTER. Our committee considered this very provision as it is written into our committee print just as fully and deliberately as the other body's committee did. We had the same influences and pressures brought to bear upon us. We decided in our committee that the bill should be reported as we did report it, rather than in the form that the committee of the other body reported it.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I am not complaining about the hearings, but the other body had 10 days of hearings, and we had only 3.

Mr. MULTER. The important point is that the provision as reported in our committee bill is what the President asked for and what the Federal Reserve Board says is necessary now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of confusion this morning about whether or not this amendment has anything to do with the price of houses. This amendment has nothing to do with price control. It has nothing to do with the price of old houses or the price of new houses.

I want to comment on the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] with respect to the fact that private housing credit is used more extensively than Government housing credit. That this fact, therefore, was an argument against this amendment. This amendment has nothing to do with private credit or public credit. This amendment simply provides there shall be control only on such credit as is extended for the construction of new houses. That is both public and private. It has nothing whatsoever to do with whether or not we shall extend control to private or public credit.

In addition, if this amendment is not adopted, GI's now having loans on houses and new construction may possibly find that they cannot obtain housing except and unless they have 100 percent down payment. They may also be required to limit their payments to 10 years or 5 years under this particular law.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. MORTON. Is it not true that unless this amendment is adopted, the only person who could buy a house is a person with a substantial bank balance?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. There is no question about it. As a matter of fact, without this amendment the small man will not have an opportunity to buy a house. This protects the home owner. This protects the little fellow. This protects the man who owns his place. This protects you and I when we want to sell our individual homes. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the big operators throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO] is recognized.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to get recognition on this particular question.

Since I have been recognized, I might say I would like to have recognition on my amendment as soon as I may have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER]

(Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, a little while ago the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] in commenting on some remarks of mine to the effect that the Government had no direct regulation over commodity exchanges, implied that I did not know what I was talking about.

Now, let us get the record straight. At that time we were discussing the question of margins on commodity exchanges. Everyone knew that was what we were talking about. I now want to repeat that there is no Government control or regulation over margins on commodity exchanges.

I want to further add that there is no Government regulation or control over speculation on commodity exchanges. There is nominal control over manipulation, or just plain cheating on commodity exchanges. I say "nominal" because no government official or agency can issue cease and desist orders in such cases. Even after a formal hearing, any appeal that is taken to the courts allows that manipulation to continue for years, if the parties involved can drag it out in the courts. That is the record.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] also saw fit to comment on the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], he implied the gentleman was simply repeating a campaign speech on the floor of this House. I do not know whether that is true or not. If it is, however, I should like to observe it was evidently a very successful campaign speech, since twice the gentleman from Oklahoma has won spirited campaigns in Oklahoma in recent weeks; and I would like to suggest to the Members of this House that if that is a campaign speech, so be it. I am for it.

The people who liked what the gentleman from Oklahoma had to say on the subject of speculation in basic commodities are typical of the people who will watch to see what the House does today in this vital matter. It is my judgment that those people do not care for either speculators or profiteers and will have little affection for those who would protect them. I welcome the roll call on this issue which the gentleman from Oklahoma predicts will take place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is recognized.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call attention to the fact, as did the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE], that there is no price control in this amendment. It has been argued that rents will go up if this amendment is adopted. Let me call attention to the fact that all we seek to do is to prevent the manipulation of present contracts, under which the purchase of homes is being financed, to prevent anyone from increasing the monthly payment that the GI or anyone has to make in respect to an existing contract for the purchase of a home. Unless this is adopted you might develop a situation where, because of the increase in the amount of the payments under the amortization, and the reduction in the period of amortization on rental properties, you might force, because of the increase in monthly operation cost incident to the increase of the payment, a situation where rents would have to be increased to cover them. That is what we are seeking to avoid. All we are seeking to do is to leave existing contracts alone, and authorize them to control credit incident to future construction.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. Is it not a fact that if this amendment is not adopted, thousands of veterans who are this very minute about to build a home under a VA loan will be defeated in possibly ever owning a home?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and I might say that the program which has already been launched has caused a lot of cutbacks in home construction, and we have been hearing about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] is recognized.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, of course there is no price ceiling on the sale of real estate, but credit largely controls the price of houses. There are practically 30,000,000 old houses in the United States. Place controls on new construction and no controls on old construction and it is obvious that old construction is put in a preferential class and there will be a spiraling of prices on old construction as compared with new, just as there was a spiraling of prices on old cars as compared with new cars. I remember when controls were on on new automobiles and no controls on the price of old cars a dealer would see that any new car he sold had been used a few miles so that he could claim it was an old car and get perhaps one-third more for it.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Is it not true that at the bottom of page 43 yesterday we adopted an amendment which directed the President to preserve all of the credit preferences which the GI's were entitled to under the Veterans' Readjustment Act?

Mr. SPENCE. That is true.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Therefore the veteran is not concerned in that.

Mr. SPENCE. That is entirely true. Furthermore, it does not affect the existing contracts about which the gentleman talks; they are not affected; it is only as to future contracts. If you adopt this amendment you are going to see a spiraling of prices on old houses that is going to prevent our citizens, including the veterans, from being able to purchase them.

I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 119, noes 102.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. PATMAN and Mr. WOLCOTT.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 153, noes 147.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JAVITS: On page 48, line 2, after the word "Government", insert a comma and add the words "including any new agency or agencies, which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary."

On page 48, line 4, after the period insert "The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. This merely inserts something that was left out by inadvertence in the original bill, and the committee, I know, will be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say one word about this before the vote, because I think it is important that we recognize the principle involved. The principle involved which the committee is accepting, and which I think we must all understand and accept, is that this is an unusual situation which requires special agencies in the shape of a mobilization planning board like the War Production Board during World War II, in order to marshal America's best brains for the mobilization effort we face today and to carry out such powers under this bill as are utilized.

I point out to the House that the National Securities Resources Board, which is now handling the mobilization effort, is essentially an advisory or staff agency, I have no doubt that the Honorable Stuart Symington would certainly be considered one of those eligible to head up a mobilization effort in a special agency. And I would also add that Charles E. Wilson, head of General Electric, should be considered as well and that he might well be drafted to do this job. He was vice chairman of the War Production Board and did a distinguished job there. I call the attention of the House to one key point that America must have at this hour, and that is reflected in General Electric's announcement—and Mr. Wilson is the president of General Electric—that it is ready to double its World War II output.

I say to my colleagues that the way we will win on the peace front is with economic power, and if necessary, with military power, and the best chance we have to avoid a serious war danger, is by that kind of genius from American industry—workers and management alike—and that kind of effort.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

(Mr. JACOBS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point.)

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, we have adopted several amendments in Committee. There was, of course, no record vote.

Some of these amendments deny banking and speculative and real estate credit controls in this bill which proposes controls on consumer credit, prices, and wages.

Later we will undoubtedly go on record regarding these amendments.

I have nothing but good will for bankers and realtors. They, as do every legitimate business and occupation, render us a valuable service.

I want to be fair with everyone. I do not favor any punitive or unnecessary legislation.

But today practical men recognize the need for economic controls—controls on consumer credit, prices, and wages.

Another control is the control of the bodies of teen-age boys who are sent forth to fight and die for us.

Now the controls left in this bill affect the pressure at the end of the pipeline—consumer credit, prices, and wages.

If nothing is done to relieve the pressure further back, the pipeline is going to break somewhere.

Every informed Member says credit control will relieve that pressure. Likewise, taxes commensurate with Government expenditures will relieve the pressure.

So I believe that credit controls should be applicable all down the line, not just at the end.

The banker deals in liquid assets. Hence inflation will hurt him perhaps more than any other businessman.

The banker and realtor has as big a stake in this horrible business as anyone.

Besides, their sons are on the battle line. I, for one, believe they are as patriotic as anyone. The ones I know are about like other folks—no better and no worse.

Then why do they object to controls that affect them? They say they fear giving the President so much power. I suppose we all have such fears; we fear the power to control consumer credit, prices, and wages. The manufacturer fears priorities and allocations and being told what he must build.

But we face an enemy of whom Richard Wilson, writing in the Indianapolis Times Monday, said:

Less emphasis is placed upon Russia's ability to produce steel than on its determination to use the maximum amount of that steel for war purposes.

Herein lies the real test: Can we self-impose sacrifices comparable to those a dictator imposes upon the Russian people?

As an American, I instinctively fear many of these controls.

But I hope I can have as much regard for my corner groceryman whose prices are to be controlled, as I have for my ability to borrow money at the bank.

I hope I will have as much regard for daily earnings of those who work for their daily bread.

But, above all, I hope that even my neighbor's son will be more precious in my estimation than my property, my credit or my political fortunes.

If I can agree to entrust the President to command his body, curtail his liberty and send him into the valley of the shadow of death, then why should I tremble at the power of the same man to control bank credits?

I question no man's motives. Each of us must be the keeper of his own conscience;—we must keep it free from the torturing fear that we have been willfully unjust.

In the discharge of our solemn responsibilities, each of us must decide for ourselves if we are using the same yardstick when we measure a proposed control over the personal lives of our sons and over the business of our bankers.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, every Member is the keeper of his own conscience.

And I am certain that every Member will be mindful of his position on all other controls, including the draft, as he records his vote on the Wolcott amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAVITS) there were—ayes 65, noes 13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: Page 53, line 12, strike out section 510, beginning at line 12 on page 53, through line 6 on page 54.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, section 510 on pages 53 and 54 has to do, of course, with employing new people to carry out certain provisions of this act. I realize of course it is going to be necessary to have people to carry out the provisions of the act. Nevertheless, my amendment seeks to strike out the section. It is the only course open to me to bring this matter out in the open. I also realize that striking out the section is undoubtedly probably not the best way to do it. But it does seem to me that if this body goes on record at this time as indicating a sentiment in accordance with what I am suggesting, as letting the conferees know we believe that once young people are being drafted into our military service for the security of the Nation we also feel that people may be called into governmental service on the same basis, then in conference something can be worked out that will be a little bit more fair and more equitable than this section of the bill.

This section 510 is set up under the theory that it is necessary to offer some inducement in the nature of high pay to have properly qualified people to come in and administer the provisions of this act. On the other hand, the whole act itself is based on the theory that there is an emergency which requires us not only to send men abroad, but also to take this sort of restrictive measure and call upon the abilities and resources of everyone in the Nation to try to do something to help this country. If we do not have to offer any inducement to get people in the Armed Services we should not have to offer any inducement to get people into governmental service when the security of this Nation requires their services during time of war.

To me it seems extremely inconsistent to say on the one hand that we have the power to call men to go abroad to serve at risk of life and limb either at very small pay or at pay greatly less than what they earn in civilian life and yet on the other hand when it comes to carrying out the terms of this act—which is strictly a war measure, and that is the basis on which it is being offered today, we find it necessary to offer high pay as an inducement to get Americans to carry out the provisions of the act here at home, at no risk of life and limb.

If we can draft men, then certainly there should be equal right to draft people into the governmental service to carry out the provisions of wartime measures even if they are to receive lower salaries than what they get in civilian life.

I do not know of any reason why that cannot be done. I am not talking about the dollar-a-year men. I think the experience in the last war showed that probably that is not the best way. But I also know that in time of war we call upon our younger people to go out and fight and bear arms, because they are physically qualified to do that. We know they are willing to make every sacrifice because they are patriotic.

On the other hand, in time of war I do not think you will ever find anyone more patriotic than those above the age at which they can serve in the armed forces.

During the last war before I went into the service I served on the draft board for a short time. It was my belief then that no place in the entire country did you find people who expressed greater patriotism and a greater willingness to serve, if only they could serve, than those who were above the age of 35 years. Let us give them that opportunity. There is no reason why they should not have it. If this country needs them, there is no reason at all why we should not be able to call on them to perform duties they are physically and mentally qualified to perform, just as we take our younger people to perform the duties for which they are qualified.

As I mentioned at the beginning, perhaps striking out this section is not the way to do it, but it is the only way I know of to call it to the attention of the Nation and to call it to the attention of the conferees. When this bill goes to conference they can then sit down together and figure out some way whereby if it is necessary to call people into the Government just as we have to call people into the armed services, they can be called without having to say, as this bill does in this section, that we recognize we cannot get patriotic people unless we offer them high salaries. There is no more reason to offer anyone a high salary to come into Government service to carry out the provisions of a wartime measure than there is to offer those same salaries to the men who go into the armed forces.

I certainly hope this body will give some consideration to the suggestion I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, striking this provision out of the bill would be a great mistake, in my opinion. It simply gives the President authority to call on the services of men who have shown that they have great ability, without having any compensation fixed for them. They could be paid $15 a day for subsistence. In the last war many of those men rendered distinguished service. It may be that occasionally you will find some fellow who has an unpatriotic spirit who would like to come here to enrich himself, but I think there are very few top men in the business world who would do this when their country is in trouble and needs their services. I think in the business world all the men the President would call on have demonstrated their ability and would render patriotic service.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. FURCOLO. The committee under this bill does contemplate paying fairly good salaries to the people who are called?

Mr. SPENCE. No, not at all. Some of them will volunteer to come and work without any salary.

Mr. FURCOLO. Is the chairman of the committee willing to express the intent for the committee, that those people shall not be paid if they are called?

Mr. SPENCE. I would not say that none of them will be paid, but I think many of the outstanding men will not ask for anything. They will not expect anything. I think we should leave them in the discretion of the President as to whether he will ask for their assistance.

I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill, and all amendments thereto, close at 1:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will that give Members who have amendments at the desk sufficient time to partially explain their amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to state how many Members will offer amendments.

Mr. SPENCE. How many amendments are there on the desk, if I may ask?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed there are three amendments on the desk.

Mr. KUNKEL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I make the suggestion to the distinguished chairman that he make that 1:40?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill, and all amendments thereto, conclude at 1:40 p. m.

Mr. HALLECK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I only do this to suggest that I think one of those amendments will not be offered. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEARNS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] have amendments which they wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, that all debate on the bill, and all amendments thereto, conclude at 1:40 p. m.?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEARNS: Insert after section 510 (b), page 54, a new subsection as follows:

"(c) Appointments to all offices and positions necessary and appropriate to the carrying out of the provisions of this act, except those positions referred to in subsection (a) of this section, shall be subject to and made in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there should be any opposition to this amendment for this reason: It is purely designed to require that all jobs which come into existence under this legislation be merit-system jobs. I am informed by the members of the committee on the majority side that possibly some of these jobs will be filled by just dollar-a-year men. We know, however, that during the former OPA days in various agencies which were set up in the operation of controls we had many, many employees that were not dollar-a-year men. Every Member of this House has many constituents in his district who have successfully passed civil-service examinations and are entitled to some kind of position if it is open through this legislation. Therefore, I merely present this amendment to take care of qualified personnel, people who have met the qualifications of a civil-service examination to qualify them for these jobs if they are in the offing.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, section 510 (a) will do exactly what the gentleman has suggested. Section 510 (b) is the section that will permit the acceptance by the Government of the services of individuals who are especially qualified for those particular positions without any pay whatsoever. Many people cannot come to Washington and give up the places where they are now employed, their pension benefits, salaries, and things like that; they will not do it even in wartime unless there is some provision made for them. This special provision, 510 (b), is here so that persons of outstanding experience and ability may be employed without compensation. They will not even be paid the dollar a year which was paid during World War II; they will be paid only if they request it, a maximum of $15 per day for subsistence. You cannot get them out of civil-service examinations, you cannot get them from the civil-service rolls; it is impossible. You have got to have outstanding people with special qualifications for this particular thing, and I hope this amendment will be defeated. Because there are a lot of fine people on civil-service rolls does not mean they are qualified for these special jobs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEARNS) there were—ayes 40, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: Page 55, at the end of the bill, add a new section as follows:

"Provided, That no person may be employed under this act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law."

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is their objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, this is the identical amendment to the one I offered last week to the committee bill, and which was adopted by a voice vote of the House.

I am sure every Member of Congress and every loyal American understands the need for a law such as this amendment provides. We are in a shooting war with communism abroad and trying to root Communists out of Government, lest we forget. The amendment speaks for itself, in terms all can understand.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment, if adopted, be placed after section 512 on page 55.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr Chairman, as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, I am naturally glad that the committee of which a great American statesman the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPENCE] is chairman and on which I have had the honor and the appreciated privilege of serving has rendered a service to the Nation in time of great crisis by clearing away the clouds of confusion which for 3 days of last week settled so deeply about this Chamber that at times it was difficult to distinguish your next seat neighbor.

I am sure that my colleagues will agree with me that it was fortunate for the Congress, and for our country, that on the committee were members of long and rich experience with the problems of inflation, scarcity of commodities and materials, and of the many abnormal conditions which characterize periods of war emergency.

While there were differences of opinion, of course, and clashes of philosophies, the debates in the committee were kept uniformly on a high level and were tempered by the thought in the mind of every member, I am sure, that it was the wish of the House and the necessity of the Nation that from our committee should come the framework of a measure commanding bipartisan support.

I think the attention of the House and of the country should be called to the fact that while our men in the armed services were fighting in Korea there were among the 27 Members of the Congress working on this bill, made necessary by another war emergency, two members of the committee who were not here when similar legislation was under consideration during the period of World War II because they then were among the men in the armed services and were in combat. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ADDONIZIO] spent 37 months overseas with the Sixtieth Infantry of the Ninth Division, participating in eight major campaigns from the invasion of North Africa, up through Sicily, Normandy, northern France, the Battle of the Bulge, central Europe, and Rhineland. He is one of the few living combat officers to wear eight campaign stars. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] served 4 years overseas in Australia, New Guinea, Philippines, and Japan. I am very sure that when they were participating in the deliberations of our committee on legislation required by the storm signals of another threatened war they were determined that if another period of war sacrifice must come to us that everything we have in a material sense, dollars and business, and everything must go into this struggle on the same basis of sacrifice to the utmost as is demanded of our men who do the fighting.

I think it fitting also to mention that on the committee which brought this bill to the House with bipartisan support were members who had served in World War I, including the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], the ranking Republican member and the chairman of the committee in the Eightieth Congress, who saw active service in France during the Meuse-Argonne offensive with a machine-gun company of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, First Division.

I do not think this is a perfect bill. I think it has been weakened where it should not have been weakened by amendments that might better have been defeated. Perhaps because the Membership is hoping that things will not actually turn out as rough as now seems the probability, and certain interests have wanted a preference in cushions upon which to rest the status quo, we have not been able to make the Defense Production Act of 1950 all that we would have desired.

But on the whole I feel that the bill is worthy of our support. Not much has been said in the debate about the provision granting the power to requisition. I would say that this is among the strongest features of the bill. The power to requisition is the best, and the most practical, weapon against hoarding, especially hoarding, in a stockpile or wholesale level.

There can be no doubt in any reasoning mind that the war emergency will interfere with home construction. Regardless of credit availability, the construction of homes must suffer a setback for the simple reason that steel and other materials will be going into the products of war. This will certainly not help the housing shortage, and it seems to me short-sighted on our part not to have conferred upon the President the stand-by authority to extend and broaden rent control when and if necessary. Doubtless this will be covered in other legislation, as well as the imperatively demanded matter of an excise tax. This time if war comes dollars can claim, and we are determined shall not receive, any preference over men.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

(Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting some time to get recognition, so my remarks are rather belated.

At the bottom of page 43 the amendment was changed to protect the GI building program, which I think was very good cooperation on the part of the committee. I do want to call the attention of the committee, not of this committee necessarily but of the Veterans' Affairs Committee possibly and the Committee on the Armed Forces, to the fact that many of these GI boys who have bought homes are being reactivated because they are members of reserve units or possibly members of different National Guard units. Many of them who are being reactivated, who are being called back into the service, are unable to make the payments on their GI homes which they have bought. There are no family allowances to give them extra money. I think that is a job which the proper committee should take care of as soon as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the GI building program should be preserved.

I think such an amendment imperative to the bill under consideration. It relates to the section which will give the President authority to apply the broadest kind of restrictions in the field of residential housing credit..

All of us recognize that the tremendous volume of residential construction is one of the first areas where we can apply the brakes so that the necessary degree of diversion of our economic activity from civilian pursuits to defense production can be achieved. We might even argue that a certain amount of reduction from the present hyperactive stage of building activity would in itself be healthy even without the Korean situation.

The point I wish to make—and I cannot make it too emphatic—is that we must be careful not to just think of construction as one great mass without distinguishing between its component parts. There are all kinds of building activity. Some of it deals with race tracks and some of it with carnivals and amusement parks. Clearly we can forego such types of construction in an emergency situation.

Taking housing itself, we must keep firmly in mind that there are all kinds of houses. There are luxury houses being built in the higher-price brackets for our wealthier citizens. There are houses in the middle-price brackets available to all our citizens. But there is one segment of our housing effort—it seems to me—that should have the highest priority in any program designed to reduce the absolute level of housing construction.

I am talking about the houses which are going to veterans with low-cost financing on liberal terms under the GI bill. When we established the GI loan benefit—and when we recently improved the effectiveness of that benefit in the new housing law—we recognized that veterans should have real preference in Government credit aids to finance their home purchases.

While veterans housing under the GI bill is substantial in volume, the plain fact is that veterans housing nonetheless is a relatively small part of our total housing production.

Let us look at the figures. I have a table—table 1—before me, based upon data from the Veterans' Administration, which shows the total dollar volume of new construction and the dollar volume of private residential construction for the 6 months ending May 1950. The table also shows the estimated construction cost of new homes purchased by veterans with a GI loan each month for the same period. When we relate these two series what do we find? We find that homes bought by veterans with GI loans account, are on the average, only 8.3 percent of the volume of total new construction and only 19.1 percent of the volume of private residential construction.

In other words, in this new legislation we are now considering, we must be extremely careful that we do not lightly give authority which would permit the controlling authorities to tamper with the veterans housing segment of the market. The figures I have quoted demonstrate amply that veterans housing is a narrow segment of the housing picture and a still narrower segment of construction generally. The majority of our housing construction at present involves higher priced homes going largely to nonveterans. That is the broad segment which should be cut first in any control measures adopted as the result of the bill which we are now considering.

The housing going to veterans with GI loans meets the very special need of our former GI's. They are getting their housing under the most favorable financing terms available in the market. They pay only 4 percent interest; they get a gratuity payment and other advantages; and they get their loans even though they were unable to save enough during the war and the postwar period to make the large down payment usually required with conventional and FHA loans.

Moreover, I would like to emphasize that veterans housing under the GI bill is not luxury housing. The great bulk of these homes are modest homes for our low-income and middle-income GI's. I have another table—table 2—before me which shows that for the past year the average purchase prices of new homes going to veterans with GI loans are centered within a range of $8,400 to $9,400.

Surely this type of housing is the very last which should be restricted as our mobilization proceeds. If we run into the holocaust of total war, naturally we will have to cut down on veterans housing, as we will in all other sectors of economic activity except those vital to war and war purposes. But in the program of partial mobilization with which we are now confronted, there is no justification whatsoever for denying low-cost housing with GI loans to our former GI's. If we must cut—and clearly we must cut some part out of the tremendous housing boom—then let us make sure that we restrict and cut down on the higher priced homes which are going to nonveterans—these are the new homes which comprise the bulk of our residential building activity.

I will admit that the framers of the present bill were on the right track in recognizing the priority of GI-financed veteran housing. This is shown by the clause in the bill in section 402 which provides that the President, in exercising controls over housing and mortgage credit, should give consideration to maintaining the relative preference of veterans in Government-sponsored housing credit aids. But while the framers were tending in the right direction, they did not go far enough. My amendment will remove all doubt on the subject. Instead of merely asking that the President give consideration to veterans financing aids, my amendment will require him to make certain that the GI loan preference of veterans is maintained.

Surely no one can in good conscience oppose my proposed amendment. Our troops in Korea have the highest priority beyond all question. It is for them primarily that we are hereby proposing to give power to cut down various sectors of our civilian economy. All I ask is that when the knife is used, that we divide what's left on a fair and equitable basis. And that means that the new housing going to veterans with financing under the GI bill should be protected with the highest priority we can give to civilian housing production.

At this point I would like to read a telegram from the Veterans of Foreign Wars which urges the strengthening of the priority provision for veterans housing, as proposed in my amendment.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 9, 1950.

Hon. CHET HOLIFIELD,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building:

Veterans of Foreign Wars strongly urge that language in Defense Production Act coming up today relating to credit controls on housing be amended to make present veterans home loan program mandatory rather than optional as in existing language. Veterans housing program represents less than 15 percent of total construction and should be preserved unless Nation becomes involved in all-out war effort.

OMAR B. KETCHUM,
Legislative Director, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

(Mrs. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to extend her remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, if curtailment of building construction is necessary it should occur in the luxury type of homes and in such types of construction as race tracks, amusement buildings, and so forth. The GI building program should not be curtailed. It comprises only 8.3 percent of total new construction for the first 6 months of 1950. The committee is to be commended, Mr. Chairman, for making it mandatory that the present GI residential credit preferences be preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday during the debate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] said that the same broad credit powers had been granted to the President in the Second War Powers Act and in the Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917. I had the legislative counsel check with the Federal Board. The Board could not find the reference in the Second War Powers Act, and the language used in the Trading With the Enemy Act is certainly not in any sense as broad as that contained in that section of the bill which was deleted from it yesterday by committee action.

I might also call attention to the fact that the Trading With the Enemy Act is still in effect. It provides that during the time of war or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, that the President can reinstitute such powers granted under the act merely by making a declaration of an emergency, or during time of war. So, even if he needs the authority, and even if the situation should arise, why, he can call those powers into being, such as they are. Of course, I do not think the Trading With the Enemy Act is nearly as broad as the grant proposed, but the President is completely protected under any circumstances. I wanted to call that to the attention of the Committee prior to the time there was a vote on the credit amendment, because I believe there will be a roll-call vote later on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman I take this time to point out that the Trading With the Enemy Act, wherein those powers were granted, as amended by the act of 1941 (55 Stat. 839), takes care of those very provisions. While the gentleman has stated that it is necessary to declare an emergency or state of war existing, I merely made the statement yesterday that in the Trading With the Enemy Act and under this act of 1941, the Second War Powers Act, 55 Stat. 839, that he did have those same broad powers, and we are asking for them in this case.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I point out that the powers are not nearly so broad and secondly, if they are contained in those particular statutes, then they can be called into effect at any time the President declares an emergency.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I might say to the gentleman that the language here is just as broad as the powers that he had at that time and is asking for the same in this particular legislation.

Mr. KUNKEL. Well, I disagree with that, but if they are, then he has them, because this act is still in effect.

Mr. BUCHANAN. He would have to declare an emergency or we would have to be in a state of war.

Mr. KUNKEL. What we are contending is that under Federal provisions you should not have emergency powers in the absence of an emergency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] were right in his contention, I do not think his colleagues on his side of the aisle would have made the vigorous attempt to exclude from this bill the credit and real-estate controls which they have succeeded in striking out of this bill. The fact of the matter is that the President does not have these credit powers now. The Federal Reserve Board has told us he does not have these powers now. He has asked for these powers. The Federal Reserve Board has said in so many words, as of August 1, referring to the provisions of this very bill, that he needs these powers and he should be given these powers at this time. I say it is indefensible to strike these provisions out of this bill.

LET'S PROTECT THE COUNTRY AGAINST RUNAWAY INFLATION OR DISASTROUS DEFLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this will probably be the last time that I will have an opportunity to speak on this measure, which, in my opinion, is one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation that has been proposed in this Congress. For the simple reason that it attempts to regiment the American people and leave the financial racketeers free, and let the inflation of the currency run wild or deflation wreck the country.

As I pointed out on yesterday, prices in a free economy are governed by two things, the volume of the Nation's currency multiplied by the velocity of its circulation. Every well-informed economist will tell you so.

One gentleman here today said that in 1928 we went into a depression because of the commodity supply. He evidently had not read the record. At that time the volume of currency had dropped from $5,698,214,612 in 1920 to $4,973,168,182 in 1928, which carried prices down with it and wrecked the Hoover administration.

I have before me a statement from the Farm Bureau Federation that has more in it, in one paragraph, than all the spurious debate we have heard in favor of regimenting the American people and leaving the financial racketeers to run wild. That is what this bill does. The American Farm Bureau Federation says:

Inflation is the condition which develops when the supply of money increases in relation to the supply of goods.

You are not doing a thing in the world to check inflation of the currency, which is now running wild. You are trying to put the bee on the little fellow, and even trying to prevent him from "hoarding" potatoes or corn, but you do not try to stop the financier, the big financial racketeer, from "hoarding" the Nation's currency.

Again the American Farm Bureau Federation wisely says:

Price and ration controls, at best, only suppress the symptoms of inflation. They invite black markets and require administrative personnel needed for production. They do not attack the problem of cheap dollars at its source, and actually decrease the supply of goods, thus depriving the country of needed defense and the citizens of goods and services.

I have before me a Treasury report of 1928 and also one of 1950, showing the inflation we are in today. Do you know what the volume of currency is now? I have not heard a single member of this committee touch side, edge or bottom of that proposition. As I said, on December 31, 1928 we had $4,793,000,000 in circulation. In 1920 we had $5,698,000,000. That was at the peak of high prices. How much have we now, Mr. Chairman? I will tell you how much. Not $5,698,000,000 as we had in 1920, but $27,156,000,000, or nearly five times as much as we had in 1920 and nearly six times as much as we had in 1928.

It increased from May 31 to June 30 of this year $67,000,000.

Not a thing in this bill even tends to check the expansion of the currency through the Federal Reserve System, or to protect us against disastrous deflation, such as we had in 1928.

But you propose in this bill to regiment the American people, and leave their destiny in the hands of certain financial interests that could wreck this country, with runaway inflation through the Federal Reserve System, or plunge us into disastrous deflation that might paralyze the Nation, bring distress to the American people, and fill our streets with breadlines, as was done in 1928.

You will note at that time we had $1,808,052,599 in Federal Reserve notes. Today we have $22,760,284,970 in Federal Reserve notes.

Remember, these Federal Reserve banks can retire these notes at any time they desire, take up the bonds which they have deposited and which have been accumulating interest all these years, and in that way plunge the Nation toward disastrous deflation.

[1] The money in circulation includes any paper currency held outside the continental limits of the United States.

[3] Does not include gold other than that held by the Treasury.

[4] These amounts are not included in the total, since the gold or silver held as security against gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 is included under gold, standard silver dollars, and silver bullion, respectively.

[5] This total includes credits with the Treasurer of the United States payable in gold certificates in (1) the gold certificate fund-Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System, in the amount of $19,643,875,142, and (2) the redemption fund for Federal Reserve notes in the amount of $522,649,141.

[7] The amount of gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 should be deducted from this amount before combining with total money held in the Treasury to arrive at the total amount of money in the United States.

NOTE.—There is maintained in the Treasury—(i) as a reserve for United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890—$156,039,431 in gold bullion; (ii) as security for Treasury notes of 1890—an equal dollar amount in standard silver dollars (these notes are being canceled and retired on receipt); (iii) as security for outstanding silver certificates—silver in bullion and standard silver dollars of a monetary value equal to the face amount of such silver certificates; and (iv) as security for gold certificates—gold bullion of a value at the legal standard equal to the face amount of such gold certificates. Federal Reserve notes are obligations of the United States and a first lien on all the assets of the issuing Federal Reserve bank. Federal Reserve notes are secured by the deposit by the Federal Reserve bank concerned, with its Federal Reserve agent, of a like amount of collateral consisting of such discounted or purchased paper as is eligible under the terms of the Federal Reserve Act, or gold certificates, or direct obligations of the United States. Each Federal Reserve bank must maintain reserves in gold certificates of not less than 25 percent against its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation. Gold certificates deposited with Federal Reserve agents as collateral, and those deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as a redemption fund, are counted as part of the required reserve. "Gold certificates" as herein used includes credits with the Treasurer of the United States payable in gold certificates. Federal Reserve bank notes and national bank notes are in process of retirement.

I hope every Member of Congress, and everyone else who reads this RECORD, will examine these two statements carefully then they will see how we have spiraled into inflation through the Federal Reserve System, which may increase, if the Federal Reserve banks desire it, while the American people are regimented and restricted under the provisions of this bill; or, as I said, these Federal Reserve notes can be retired down to where they were in 1928, or lower, and the country plunged into a disastrous deflation that might mean the end of the Republic.

I am appealing to the Committee on Banking and Currency to take this bill back and rewrite it so as to prevent inflation, by limiting, by law, the amount of money that can be placed in circulation at one time; and at the same time putting a floor under the volume of our currency in order to prevent disastrous deflation such as we had from 1928 to 1933.

That can be done by authorizing and directing the Department of the Treasury to issue United States notes with a gold reserve behind them to hold the volume of the currency up to the minimum prescribed by law—thereby protecting us against disastrous deflation.

During the War Between the States, when the volume of the Nation's currency sank below the danger point, Abraham Lincoln's administration issued $346,681,016 in United States notes with nothing but the credit of the Government behind them, since we did not have the gold to supply the reserve.

That money is still in circulation, as you will see from the circulation statement of June 30, 1950, and also from the circulation statement of December 31, 1928, both of which I have inserted. Of course, there is now a gold reserve behind those notes; but Lincoln did not have the gold to provide that reserve at the time this money was issued.

Instead of regimenting the American people, and permitting the selfish interests to inflate our currency beyond the danger point, or plunge us into a panic by disastrous deflation, I appeal to the Committee on Banking and Currency to take this bill back and rewrite it, so as to protect the American people against these dangers, which, as I said, might imperil the very life of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

(Mr. HOPE, Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN, Mr. RANKIN, Mr. KUNKEL, and Mr. COOLEY asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks.)

(Mr. HAYS of Arkansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the debate should not close without reference to the historic statement in the declaration of policy on the purposes of the United States in resisting aggression. For the first time in history we are acting at the request of an international agency for peace and are supported by other nations in resisting aggression. The United Nations was organized to maintain peace. It represents the conscience of the world in opposition to war and aggression. Whatever we call the operations in Korea, we know that our purpose is to help maintain peace under the principles of world law. A great forward step has been taken in mankind's long struggle for justice and peace. America has been thrust into the role of leadership and our action on this bill will indicate to the world that our resolutions are firm and our moral resources equal to the task.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, exempting from these remarks the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I want to pay my tribute to this committee. I do not think there has been a harder working, more conscientious, more unselfish committee in the House than the Committee on Banking and Currency. I not only feel that it is a great honor to preside over that committee but it is a great honor and privilege to be associated with it.

May I say also that I think that committee has one of the best clerks I have ever seen in the House. Bill Hallahan is conscientious, industrious, and able. We could not have a more efficient clerk. He is a great asset to that committee. Our two experts, Orman S. Fink and John E. Barriere, are also men upon whom we can rely for accurate and impartial information.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the committee substitute for the original bill, as amended.

The committee substitute was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency for further hearings and study.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this being a straight motion to recommit, without instructions, it is not permissible under the rule under which we are considering the bill in Committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SMITH of Virginia). The Chair is ready to rule.

That motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it is in order to make a motion that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency for further study and hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. In the consideration of this bill the Committee of the Whole is operating under a special rule which lays down the conditions under which the bill is to be considered. The motion of the gentleman from Mississippi is not in order at this time.

Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 740, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, we ask for separate votes on three amendments: First, on the Wolcott amendment on the definition of credit; second, on the Cooley amendment with reference to the regulation of commodity exchanges; and third, on the Wolcott amendment with reference to real estate.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Spence amendment, title II, covering rationing and price control.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 30, insert a new title II, as follows:

"TITLE II

"PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

"SEC. 201. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

"SEC. 202. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor, and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

"(c) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders at the same time both—

"(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service; and

"(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings, wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this act, shall be issued whenever an increase in wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally.

"Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

"(d) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this act. From time to time the President shall adjust ceilings, and in determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950: Provided, That no regulation or order shall contain any provision requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

"(e) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection.

"(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

"(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by such producer during the first 30-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed; and no ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

"(f) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

"(i) Rentals for real property;

"(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

"(iii) Prices or rentals (a) for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

"(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

"(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility;

"(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

"(g) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

"SEC. 203. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

"SEC. 204. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

"SEC. 205. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer solciit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

"SEC. 206. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

"SEC. 207. (a) At any time within 6 months after the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within 6 months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order, may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

"(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this act.

"(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

"(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

"SEC. 208. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

"(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such 30 days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

"(d) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

"SEC. 209. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 205 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within 1 year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge, or overcharges, if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

"(1) If the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

"(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"SEC. 210. As used in this title—

"(a) The word 'person' includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

"(b) The word 'materials' shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

"(c) The word 'facilities' shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

"(d) The term 'national defense' means the operations and activities of the Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

"(e) The words 'wages, salaries, and other compensation' shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but without limitation, vacation and holding payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 393, nays 3, not voting 34, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Sabath with Mr. Latham.

Mr. Sadowski with Mr. William L. Pfeiffer.

Mr. Murphy with Mr. Eaton.

Mr. Magee with Mr. Hugh D. Scott, Jr.

Mr. Denton with Mr. Edwin Arthur Hall.

Mr. Rivers with Mr. Smith of Ohio.

Mr. Hare with Mr. Talle.

Mr. Dingell with Mr. Mason.

Mr. Williams with Mr. Barrett of Wyoming.

Mr. Winstead with Mr. Smith of Kansas.

Mr. Regan with Mr. McMillen of Illinois.

Mr. Gossett with Mr. Hinshaw.

Mr. Kennedy with Mr. Widnall.

Mr. White of Idaho with Mr. Gillette.

Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Murray of Wisconsin.

Mr. NICHOLSON changed his vote from "nay to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 38, line 2, after the words "real estate", insert the word "construction."

On page 38, line 22, after the words "real estate", insert the word "construction."

On page 39, line 3, after the word "any", insert "consumer or real estate construction."

On page 39, line 5, after the word "any", insert "such"; on line 8, after the word "any", insert "such"; on line 11, after the word "any", insert "such";

On page 41, line 23, strike out all of paragraph (2) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) 'Real estate construction credit' means any credit, hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term 'new construction' means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term 'real property' includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term 'real estate construction credit' shall not include any loan or loans made, insured or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, a vote "no" is against the amendment and a vote "aye" is for the amendment?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. SPENCE. There seems to be some doubt about that.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 202, nays 188, answered "present" 5, not voting 35, as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NICHOLSON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency for further study and action.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 383, nays 12, answered "present" 1, not voting 34, as follows:

Title V. Control of credit and commodity speculation.
Title VI. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 103. It is hereby made unlawful for any person wilfully to hoard any necessities. The term "necessaries" as used in this section means foods; feeds; wearing apparel; automobile tires; containers primarily designed or intended for containing foods, feeds, or fertilizers; fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas; fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients; tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of the above-named articles and materials; and any other articles and materials the equitable distribution of which the President shall find, and shall by proclamation declare, to be essential to carry out the purposes of this act. Necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this section when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time; (b) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time or reasonably required to furnish necessaries produced in surplus quantities seasonably throughout the periad of scant or no production, or (c) withheld whether by possession or under any contract or arrangement from the market by any person for the purpose of unreasonably increasing or diminishing the price: Provided, That this section shall not apply to futures trading transactions on any commodity exchange or board of trade.

TITLE II

PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 201. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions, or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 202. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor, and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders at the same time, both

(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service; and

(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this act, shall be issued whenever an increase in wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally.

Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24 to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this act. From time to time the President shall adjust ceilings, and in determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950: Provided, That no regulation or order shall contain any provision requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relation Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by such producer during the first 30-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed; and no ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milks, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals (a) for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility;

(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

SEC. 203. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

SEC. 204. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advice and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 205. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 206. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 207. (a) At any time within 6 months after the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within 6 months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 208. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiciton to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such 30 days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

(d) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

SEC. 209. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 205 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 205 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge, or overcharges, if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

SEC. 210. As used in this title—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or Government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but without limitation, vacation and holding payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

TITLE III—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 301. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts therof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) where the President finds that all other means of acquiring or obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within 3 years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE IV—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 401. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guaranty and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guaranty made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or account-ability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 403. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 404. (a) For the purposes of sections 402 and 403, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have it powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similiarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchase of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE V—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL-ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 501. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real-estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real-estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any consumer or real-estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) Any rules, regulations, or orders for real estate credit shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans of like classifications authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any rule, regulation, or order otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans.

(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person," in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 502. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this act; and

(iv) in administering this act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 602. As used in this act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary, and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 604. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Any regulation or order under this act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 605. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 606. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this act.

SEC. 607. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title I of this act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 608. (a) No act or omission to act pursuant to this act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder and that if any objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President or such person as he may designate shall approve or disapprove the request.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

(d) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within 90 days after the approval of this act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

SEC. 609. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 610. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 611. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purpose of this act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

SEC. 612. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 613. That no person may be employed under this act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

SEC. 614. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1951, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill H. R. 9176.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as not voting on roll call No. 230. I was present in the Chamber, and I ask to be recorded as voting "no."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF AUGUST 14

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to find out from our distinguished majority leader as to the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. Monday: There is a discharge petition which it is in order to call up on Monday but I cannot advise the Members whether it will be called up or not because any one of those who signed the petition can call it up. I am sorry I cannot give any definite information, but I am not going to take any responsibility that I am not reasonably certain I can carry out if I make a promise with reference to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The assumption is that the bill will be called up.

Mr. McCORMACK. From information that I have received the assumption is that it will be called. I think my friend from Massachusetts will agree with that. Am I correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is what I understand.

Mr. McCORMACK. The discharge petition is on a bill before the Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service relating to the curtailment of postal service.

Outside of that it is District Day and there are four district bills on the calendar for that day:

H. R. 9047, to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the keeping and running at large of goats.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are there many of those in the District, or are they yet to come?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know how many four-legged ones there are.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many two-legged ones?

Mr. McCORMACK. The second bill is H. R. 7240, amending the existing law relating to barbers;

H. R. 4281, an act limiting the number of taxicabs;

S. 3659, relating to dealers' identification tags.

Then there is the bill S. 192 relating to the Indians of New York State in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is very much interested.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thought we passed that.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; it was called twice on the Consent Calendar. An amendment was offered to it by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS] but consent was not given for its consideration.

Then there is House Joint Resolution 516 dealing with German enemy assets.

Tuesday: The Private Calendar will be called on Tuesday. I wish the gentleman would correct his notice so that he will put that down. I overlooked it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have it on my notice; I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then, of course, if any of the bills scheduled for consideration on Monday are not finished they will be continued on Tuesday.

H. R. 8594, facilities for the reserve components of the armed services. A rule is out on that bill.

H. R. 6277, relating to the Russian Railway Service Corps. That is a bill which the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] introduced and which we could not take up before because of his inability to be here due to family illness.

Wednesday: The social security conference report will be taken up Wednesday and continuing Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, will be the Federal judgeship bills.

Of course, if the Committee on Rules reports out a rule on any legislation reported out of a standing committee that the leadership feels ought to be brought up it will be considered.

This means that the judgeship bills are sort of fill-in business.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any information about the appropriation conference report?

Mr. McCORMACK. No, I have not.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Also I understand there is another appropriation bill yet to come.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is the emergency appropriation bill. The best information I have is from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and that is the best possible information, that it will be ready week after next.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Both of them?

Mr. McCORMACK. The emergency appropriation bill.

Any further program or changes will be announced later. Conference reports, of course, may be brought up at any time.

WITHDRAWAL OF EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have stricken from the permanent RECORD an extension of remarks I inserted on August 7, 1950, appearing on page A5975, and that the Public Printer be instructed not to make any reprints of the aforesaid extension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WIDNALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. WIDNALL. Mr. Speaker, at the time of roll call No. 228 I was detained at the Naval Hospital under doctor's orders. If I had been present at that time I would have voted "yea" on that roll call.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes today following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

DR. JOSEPH L. PFEIFER

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure at this time in saying a few words of praise for our colleague, Dr. JOSEPH L. PFEIFER.

Since I had been in Congress, I have admired the activities of this man on matters pertaining to the welfare of his constituents particularly those of Italian descent. His recent trips to Europe, his private audiences with His Holiness, Pope Pius XII, and with Prime Minister DeGasperi and Foreign Minister Sforza have done much to help in the reconstruction and the rehabilitation of Italy.

His latest report to the Congress as the result of his most recent trip dealt with the unemployment situation in Italy and means to overcome it. He has been praised by the State Department for the position he has taken on various matters of deep concern to all.

The work of Dr. PFEIFER is well known to all the Members of Congress. Because of his ability as a legislator and his devotion to his duties, I feel greatly honored to be associated with this fine statesman in the House of Representatives and I consider him as one of the best friends of the Americans of Italian extraction.

His son Thomas E. Pfeifer and my son Anthony Cavalcante, Jr. are graduates of the United States Military Academy at West Point. They are now both serving as lieutenants in the armed services of their country.

His record warrants his return to Congress.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, failure to provide a dependents allotment program for the armed services is producing a serious morale problem. Men are being sent overseas in ever-increasing numbers, and most of these shipments involve a disruption of home life. Their dependents are in most cases deprived of benefits they enjoyed at military posts and as a result they are confronted with increased costs of living.

Thus far the servicemen and their families are the only ones who have had to give up anything as a result of the Korean conflict. The least we can do is to give these people a decent break and to provide dependents' allotments for them. They are doing our fighting. It is time for us to do some fighting for them.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 14 OF THE MERCHANT SHIP SALES ACT OF 1946, AS AMENDED

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 193.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 14 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, is amended by striking out the word "or" after the word "contract" where it appears the second time and inserting in lieu thereof the word "of," so that the section as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 14. No contract of sale shall be made under this act after January 15, 1951, and no contract of charter shall be made under this act after June 30, 1950, except as provided for charter under subsections (e) and (f) of section 5 hereof, as amended."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HELEN M. BOOTH

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4136) for the relief of Helen M. Booth, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "negligence of" and insert "failure of the."

Page 2, line 4, after "Act", insert ": Provided, however, That the passage of this act shall not in any way be construed as an inference of liability on the part of the United States Government."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE HATCH ACT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9023) to amend the Hatch Act, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 9 of the act entitled 'An act to prevent pernicious political activities,' approved August 2, 1939, is amended by striking out subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following subsections:

"'(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be removed immediately from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any Act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person: Provided, however, That the United States Civil Service Commission finds by unanimous vote that the violation does not warrant removal, a lesser penalty shall be imposed by direction of the Commission: Provided further, That in no case shall the penalty be less than 90 days' suspension without pay: And provided further, That in the case of any person who has heretofore been removed from the service under the provisions of this section, the Commission shall upon request of said person reopen and reconsider the record in such case. If it shall find by a unanimous vote that the acts committed were such as to warrant a penalty of less than removal it shall issue an order revoking the restriction against reemployment in the position from which removed, or in any other position for which he may be qualified, but no such revocation shall become effective until at least 90 days have elapsed following the date of the removal of such person from office.

"'(c) At the end of each fiscal year the Commission shall report to the President for transmittal to the Congress the names, addresses, and nature of employment of all persons with respect to whom action has been taken by the Commission under the terms of this section, with a statement of the facts upon which action was taken, and the penalty imposed.'

PREPARATIONS FOR MOVING TO OLD SENATE CHAMBER

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, the minority leader, I call attention to the fact that the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate talked with me this morning about moving the desks and Senators' papers and various things which had to be moved to Senators' offices so that the Senate might move to the old Supreme Court room on Monday. The Sergeant at Arms tells me that it will take Saturday and Sunday to move to Senators' offices the various papers and documents that are in their desks, and also to straighten up the old Supreme Court room so that the Senate may meet there Monday morning. He suggested that if the Senate could recess some time between 3 and 4 o'clock today he could have his force put in 2 or 3 hours this afternoon starting to make the move, so that the Senate could begin Monday to transact its business in its temporary quarters. I am wondering what the minority leader and other Senators on the other side of the aisle think about the suggestion.

Mr. WHERRY. It was stated yesterday that today the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], would speak on the pending bill. I am not sure there was an official announcement to that effect, but at least the Members of the Senate got that impression.

I suggest to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that it is perfectly agreeable to the minority for the Senate to recess whenever the distinguished acting majority leader feels the Senate should recess, either at 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock. However, I am wondering if we could not hear the addresses of the three Senators I have named before the recess is taken.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall be glad to have that done, because I assured the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] last evening that they would have an opportunity to speak today, and yesterday morning, when the bill was first taken up, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] announced that he desired to speak today. So, if it is agreeable to the Senator from New York, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Virginia, who are scheduled to speak, that we recess at some time between 3 and 4 o'clock this afternoon, the Sergeant at Arms will be able to direct those who will conduct the operation, to remove to the offices of the various Senators the letters and documents now in their desks in the Senate Chamber, as well as remove the desks themselves.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I will say that I do not expect to take more than 30 minutes, or 40 minutes at the outside, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to say that I contemplate speaking 25 or 30 minutes, in the absence of interruptions. Of course, as I indicated yesterday, if questions are asked, I would undertake to answer them.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. IVES. Exclusive of any questions that may be raised at the conclusion of my remarks, I shall not take more than 30 minutes to deliver my prepared address.

Mr. MAYBANK. Excluding questions that may be asked and answers made to them by the speakers, the three Senators will occupy about 2 hours. That will assure that the Sergeant at Arms may begin the operation of removing papers and documents, and so forth, by about 4 o'clock, or it may be possible that he can begin earlier than that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yesterday in a colloquy in which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] took part, he asked whether the desks and chairs of Senators were to be retained when the improvements to the Senate Chamber are completed. As I recall, the reply was that the chairs would be retained, but I do not believe I heard any statement made with respect to the desks. Are the desks also to be retained? I agree entirely with what the Senator from Massachusetts said, which was that the desks and chairs should be retained. I hope they will be retained. I want to vote that they be retained in the Senate Chamber, if we have an opportunity to vote on the matter.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration. The question just asked about the desks and chairs was asked in that committee by the Senator from Massachusetts. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] assured the Senator from Massachusetts that the chairs and the desks would be retained "as is" in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. WHERRY. I am sure that is the answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator from Tennessee feels as he does about that matter. He knows a great deal about the history of the Senate, and about how much history clusters around these desks. If there is any doubt about these desks or these chairs being disposed of the way the panels were disposed of and the nice door frames were disposed of, I should like to have some Senator rise and says something about it now. If there is any doubt at all on that question we ought to have a vote on the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recalls the incident in question. The chairman of the Committee on Public Works, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], as the Chair recalls, announced that the desks and chairs would be replaced as they are now, but they would have to be taken out of the Senate Chamber temporarily.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is why I asked that the Senate recess between 3 and 4 o'clock, so that the desks and the chairs could be stored, to be brought back again and replaced in the Senate Chamber when the alterations in the Chamber are completed. Of course, the chairs and desks are not going to be removed from the Chamber permanently. It is necessary, however, that they be removed temporarily so the workmen can work in the Chamber on Monday morning. They will be retained.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I am a member of the Committee on the Reconstruction of the Senate Chamber, and I can say that there is not the slightest doubt that the desks are to remain here. There is no question whatever on that subject. I have seen drawings of the reconstructed Chamber showing the desks in the Chamber. There is no need for any Senator to be concerned over the matter. No one has ever proposed any other procedure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Ohio for what he has said.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio, who is a member of the Committee on the Reconstruction of the Senate Chamber. What, if any, arrangements have been made for loudspeaker systems of some kind in the Senate Chamber? I ask that question advisedly, I think, for throughout every day's work here we often hear, time and time again, a Senator requested to repeat his remarks because he cannot be heard. Very often that has been the situation in the case of the Senator now speaking.

Is any kind of loudspeaker system planned for the new Chamber?

Mr. TAFT. The new floor will be wired so that outlets will be available for, I believe, half a dozen loudspeaker installments in different parts of the Chamber. The committee did not feel that it had any authority whatever to provide for such loudspeakers, but in case the Senate ever decides that it wishes to use them, the Chamber will be wired so that they can be installed.

Mr. HUNT. I think that is very fine.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, the distinguished minority leader. I wish to ask him if he thinks we can work out a unanimous-consent agreement to have the Senate vote next week on Senate bill 3936. I wish to ask him how he feels about that matter, because the House has passed the corresponding bill, doing so overwhelmingly last evening; and time is of the essence, and we should pass this bill promptly.

I appreciate the fact that I have not discussed the suggestion fully with the distinguished minority leader, but I should like to have him state his ideas about the possibility of working out an agreement for the Senate to vote on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the minority leader is always willing to cooperate in an attempt to work out a unanimous-consent agreement. It would be my judgment now that the agreement which could be reached would provide for the vote to be taken some time in the latter part of next week.

If the Senator from South Carolina will bring up the matter again on Monday, we shall see then what can be done. In the meantime, my advice to him would be that it probably would be possible to obtain an agreement to vote on the bill in the latter part of next week.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me say to my good friend, the minority leader, that I hope he will consider this matter over the week end, and I hope that on Monday we shall be able to reach a unanimous-consent agreement to have the Senate vote on the bill not later than Wednesday of next week.

Mr. WHERRY. I can assure the Senator from South Carolina that it will be very difficult to work out an agreement to provide for the Senate to vote on either Tuesday or Wednesday of next week, even though I originally had hoped that that would be the arrangement. However, I am glad to say that I hope an agreement can be reached to have the Senate vote on the bill on Thursday or Friday of next week.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the pending bill, Senate bill 3936, proposes to turn over to the President complete and arbitrary dictatorial power over the entire economic life of the United States and, to a large extent, over the lives and activities of its citizens. The bill would authorize the President to install a system completely at variance with the free economy under which this country has been built up and to which I believe it owes its tremendous productive power and the standard of living of its people.

There are many provisions of the bill which I consider to be necessary under present conditions, but certainly there is complete confusion in the minds of the public regarding the different types of controls which now are proposed. I think there is considerable confusion in the mind of every Senator—and necessarily so—as to the many different kinds of controls and the relative justification for different controls. People are much too much inclined, apparently, to say either "We are for controls," or "We are against controls."

I am not protesting against controls in general; but I believe that certain types of controls can change our free economic system into a semisocialist, regimented Nation. Such controls should be granted only on a clear showing of economic emergency, and for the duration of that emergency.

Of course, Mr. President, the Government already has a considerable power and control over business and economic life, and it will always have such power. No one is disposed to say that there should not be controls over the economy—controls of the kinds which traditionally have been imposed—and that perhaps there should be some additional controls.

The powers provided for in this bill may be divided roughly into three classes:

First, there are additional powers to control credit, particularly consumer credit and credit for the construction of buildings. These powers certainly present no great departure from normal Government principles. The Government has always controlled credit through its regulation of the banks, but the danger to any nation in peace or in war from excessive control of credit has long been recognized.

I myself have always favored as a peacetime measure the power to control consumer credit, which has assumed very much greater importance in modern days. I believe credit control is one of the most important necessary weapons which any government should have, and I certainly feel that these provisions of the bill should be enacted. Today we face a serious inflationary condition, which has developed almost entirely because of an undue expansion of credit. Even before the Korean war, for a number of reasons which appear very clearly in the latest statistical reports on these various matters, prices had begun to rise.

For instance, consumer credit, including installment credit, has increased, in a period of 12 months, by the sum of $3,500,000,000. In other words, that constitutes a direct creation of purchasing power without necessarily a corresponding production, or the production only follows the increase in purchasing power.

Total mortgage loans in the month of May alone amounted to $1,400,000,000. They had been an average of $1,100,000,000 for many months.

The loans of commercial banks have increased, in 12 months, from $41,000,000,000 to $45,000,000,000—an increase of $4,000,000,000 in such loans in 1 year's time, with the holdings of Government securities increasing, also, from $63,000,000,000 to $66,000,000,000.

The total deposits in banks have increased from $137,500,000 to $143,000,000,000, or an increase of $5,500,000,000, which indicates a general increase in credit, brought about very largely by the policies of the Government iteself. The Federal Reserve Board has rather loosened up on credit since the slight depression of 1949.

In a period of 6 months there has been a net increase of $3,000,000,000 in the case of mortgage debts. So we are moving at the rate of $6,000,000,000 annually in the increase in housing credit.

On top of that, we also have the Government deficit for the last fiscal year of more than $3,000,000,000.

So we had every kind of inflationary force working in this country before the Korean war began.

A reversal of this policy, plus a new tax bill, plus the credit control powers which here are proposed, in my opinion can undo the greater part of the price rise which has occurred. The economic effect of the Korean war, reflected in actual buying for the Government, is negligible. Most of the effect of that war thus far has simply been a phychological effect.

The second class of powers relate to production of materials for the Armed Forces, the stimulation of increased production for that purpose, and direct Government operation. While I am inclined to believe that the Government can get anything it wants to get and with priority, without powers given in this act, I see no objection to granting these powers more clearly. In fact, I think they should be granted more clearly. The power to demand priority and to require allocation is arbitrary, but is probably necessary when we have such a tremendous civilian demand as we have at the present moment. Loans and the guaranty of loans were useful weapons in the last war to secure prompt production. I question somewhat the necesity of permitting the Government to go into business itself, and I feel that Congress should be asked to authorize each instance in which the Government does propose to go into a manufacturing business. I shall deal further with that in proposing an amendment to that section.

The third type of powers contained in the bill relate to general economic control. These powers are not only those contained in title IV, but they are scattered through the bill because the language providing for Government action is so broad that it can be extended far beyond the control of production for the Armed Forces. Thus the allocation power contained in section 101 is broad enough to permit the Government to close down any business in this country by shutting off materials. It is broad enough, in my opinion, to tell every farmer what he can plant and what he cannot plant. It certainly is broad enough to authorize a complete rationing system for consumers. Under section 303, the Government can go into any business, including mining, manufacture, and commerce. The definition of national defense found on page 67 is so broad that in those sections where the only limit is the use for national defense, the powers granted can be used for general economic control. Title IV gives complete power to fix prices and fix wages at the discretion of the President.

I have no difficulty with the first two classes of powers, and I believe that most of them are essential under present circumstances but I have serious doubt as to the necessity at this time of giving the President arbitrary and dictatorial powers over the entire national economy .

It is said that these powers are standby powers. That term is completely misleading. The first Price Control Act in the World War gave almost the same powers, and at that time they were also discretionary. Many of the powers granted to the President in permanent legislation are discretionary powers to be put into effect only if he chooses to exercise them. No one called them standby. It may be that the President does not intend to use them at once, but as far as Congress is concerned, we are the ones who are authorizing a complete change in the character of the life of this Nation, and I do not think we should grant any discretion to make that change to the President, unless we think it is necessary for him to use that discretion, and he himself at this time does not think it is necessary for him to use that discretion. I do not see how we can avoid our constitutional responsibility of deciding, ourselves, whether controls so important as these, which would change the character of our life, are actually necessary at this time or are not necessary. If they are not, I do not think we should authorize the President to use them now, or at any future time, without further congressional action.

Mr. President, I do not believe the people realize the nature of the changes in our economy authorized by this bill. If we were engaged in the third world war, I would not hesitate for a moment to grant every power here sought. When we are engaged in protecting the freedom of the entire Nation against foreign aggression it is necessary temporarily to surrender our freedoms at home. I was assistant counsel for the Food Administration in the First World War, and I think its control then was necessary. I helped write the first Price Control Act in 1941, and to secure its passage, and, with all its faults, I believe that price control was absolutely necessary at that time. The question is whether any similar emergency exists today. It seems to me, however, that it will take a real economic emergency to justify or balance the dangers and inconveniences and constitutional infringements involved in a control system, particularly in time of peace, when the people do not have the spirit of sacrifice which is produced by an all-out war. I do not intend to say that the Korean war is not a real war, or that it does not carry many of the heartbreaks and tragedies of a large war. But from an economic standpoint, it is not any particular strain on the economy of this country. Most of the materials and equipment needed are already in existence. They have to be, or they never will get to Korea. Those that can be manufactured during the next 6 months are merely a drop in the bucket in the tremendous production in which we are now engaged. Even the increased armament program as presented to us up to this time, which includes Korea and a much larger preparation for defense, is easily within the capacity of this country, on a more or less normal free economic basis. President Truman has proposed additional appropriations of about $16,000,000,000, although it is not clear how fast this will be needed or spent. There should be substantial reductions in domestic expenditures and foreign economic expenditures, so that I would judge that the program presented to Congress involves perhaps ten to twelve billion dollars increase over the $40,000,000,000 a year which we are now spending. In my opinion, this program can be handled by increased taxes and credit control. A balanced budget and the prevention of any continued increase in outstanding credit have long been recognized already as the proper weapons to prevent inflation. I think we can and should pay for the program as we go, and that if we do, price control is not necessary.

In weighing the necessity of controls I think we should realize that they are far more difficult of administration than they seem to be when we enact the law. It is certainly far more difficult to administer controls successfully than it is to sit here and enact a law such as the one before the Senate. When prices start to go up people assume that all the Government has to do is to step in and say "No." A few orders from Washington and the people think they have complete protection against profiteering. But our experience in this country shows that it is not so simple as that. In the first place, it is almost impossible to start price control and hold it to a few selected fields. If we fix the price of steel, it becomes necessary to fix the price of iron ore and scrap and alloys and all the products of steel, and then all other metals which are in any way involved in steel. If we fix the price of wheat, we have to fix the price of corn and rye and oats and barley. If we fix the price of any raw material, or any manufactured goods, we have to follow it down through the channels of distribution to prevent profiteering along the line, until we fix the retail price. If we fix prices, we soon have to regulate almost every practice in many different industries, because those practices inevitably affect the price. We saw that in the World War. It is generally agreed now that prices cannot be effectively fixed unless wages and salaries are also controlled. There are nearly a billion transactions a day, including sales and wage payments in the United States, and the moment control begins it has to be gradually extended until the Federal Government is trying to lay down the rules on which every one of those billion transactions a day is to be conducted. That was Mr. Henderson's experience, and it is almost certainly necessary.

When the Government undertakes such a tremendous detailed control it has to take on employees who may well number 500,000 before the whole project is completed. Furthermore, it cannot be done with any hope that you can maintain justice or freedom or equality. Appeals to the court are necessarily denied or severely limited, because, of course, the decrees of the Price Administrator have to be immediately effective if they are to be effective at all. We have seen recently the injustices in the rent-control system, even after every effort to require proper adjustments. During the World War, I had case after case brought to my attention where arbitrary rulings destroyed the livelihood of patriotic citizens.

Furthermore, the problems of a country this size are so infinitely complex that no man knows enough to do the job right. Unquestionably, what we obtain is better than all-out inflation which might be produced by a world war, but it is full of mistakes and unexpected results. The system tends to produce tremendous shortages, because the holding of the price below its economic level increases demand and decreases supply. Under OPA controls, many important products disappeared from the market. At different times there was no butter, no meat, no soap or canned goods, no white shirts or new suits, no leather, and no shoes. Then it becomes necessary to ration with all the red tape and chiseling that such a system produces. I am quite certain that it was the mistakes of the OPA in the World War which resulted in these shortages and finally brought about a spiral of rising prices and wages which undid most of the good the system had done. And yet I believe any director is going to make the same mistakes because of the vast field of uncertainty and the tremendous pressures which are brought to bear from every group concerned with their selfish interest.

Finally, in the United States, more than in any foreign country, we face the danger of a complete breakdown of controls, and lawlessness, particularly in time of peace. In time of war, a certain morale develops which makes it possible to enforce control. In the World War, Mr. Hoover relied almost entirely on that morale with few enforcement powers. During the Second World War, men who felt they were aggrieved still remembered their boys at the front and accepted without complaint the order which perhaps made them a casualty at home. But after the war, whenever the economic price of any commodity was above the OPA price, the commodity went into the black market to seek the natural level of price. Corn, lumber, and meat sold all over America at black-market prices. At one time there was practically no lumber in the lumber yards, or anywhere, outside of the black market. The American people do not like to be regimented, and they do not like to be ordered around.

I think those who vote for this price control are going to regret bitterly their vote by a year from this time, unless, unfortunately, we are involved in a third world war.

Mr. President, I have indicated that there is a condition under which price control may be necessary and may work better than in ordinary times. Perhaps such a condition may exist short of war. There is some suggestion that the administration has not told the people all of the facts. It has not presented the program which it really is looking forward to for the American people, that perhaps we are going to spend $45,000,000,000 a year on our Armed Forces instead of $25,000,000,000; perhaps we are going to begin a 3-year plan to make this Nation the most powerful military force the world has ever seen in time of peace.

That may be the program which the Nation perhaps should adopt. I do not venture to express an opinion at this time on that question. If there is such a program, then I think we ought to know what it is. If our total Government expenses are going to be $75,000,000,000 instead of $52,000,000,000, I doubt if we can get along without price control.

I doubt very much that we can raise sufficient revenue by taxes to meet such a tremendous expenditure. The thing that forces control is the vast expenditure by the Government over and above the taxes that can be raised. In the World War we were spending, roughly speaking, $100,000,000,000 and we collected $50,000,000,000 in taxes, a deficit of $50,000,000,000 a year which we must continue with unless we have arbitrary and rigid controls. It may be that an expenditure of $75,000,000,000 a year, if that is what is contemplated, would make such controls necessary. If it is, my objections to this bill might entirely disappear. If there is any such program, however, I believe the American people ought to know it. I can only assume at the moment that the proposed increase already laid before us represents an adequate program to secure the defense of the United States.

Remember that what we do here may last for 10 years. The new level of spending may continue as long as the Russian menace exists. If that is the fact it becomes all the more important that we adjust our economy to that semipermanent condition by levying enough taxes to pay as we go and prevent inflation by proper credit control retaining as much economic freedom as possible, so that our progress may continue. Certainly, the American people would be sick of price controls long before the end of any 10-year period.

Under the circumstances I have set forth, I believe very strongly that Congress should reserve for itself the right to determine whether all-out controls should be put into effect, and I propose to offer an amendment providing that title 4 shall only take effect upon passage of a further joint resolution by the Congress. The position which I have taken, I understand, is almost exactly that of President Truman on this issue, and also the position of his economic advisers. I invite attention to their legislative recommendations on page 14 of the July report to the President. The President is not willing to say that price controls and wage controls are needed at this time. I agree with him, and I think it is wrong for Congress to enact them at a time when they are not necessary.

Mr. President, I should like to read the recommendations of the President's economic advisers. They were passed on by the President to Congress after the Korean war crisis had occurred. The recommendations are as follows:

1. On account of the cost of expanding our military strength, and to help contain inflationary pressures, an interim revenue measure should be enacted immediately to yield substantial additional revenue in the current fiscal year.

That bill is being considered. We have practically finished its consideration in the committee, and it will be before us.

2. As a safeguard against inflationary buying, and to reduce the demand for scarce materials, authority should be granted to regulate consumer credit, to restrain mortgage credit, particularly for housing, and to limit speculation in commodities.

I agree with that recommendation. Those powers are contained in this bill.

3. In view of the mounting shortage of some commodities required for the national defense, authority should be granted for priorities and allocations of these commodities, for the limitation of nonessential uses, for the prevention of inventory hoarding, and for the requisitioning of supplies.

It does not speak of all commodities.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I should like to state the next recommendation; then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

4. To expedite the production of certain commodities needed for the military and for adequate stockpiling, and to guard against a dangerous shortage of these materials in the event of any emergency calling for further expansion of our military efforts, a program should be adopted which provides loans and incentives for the expansion of capacity, for technological developments, and for the production of essential supplies.

I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator spoke about over-all controls. That was a subject which concerned me and two other members of the committee very much. I should like to know whether under the Senator's proposal his concurrent resolution would go only to over-all controls and that in the meantime the President would be given authority to impose selective controls on such articles as rubber, for example, which was used in committee as an illustration of a class of articles which were very important to the defense program.

Mr. TAFT. Rubber got out of line because of the foreign situation. We cannot have an over-all control on the price of rubber any more than we can have it on the price of coffee. My proposal is that title IV should go into effect only on the passage of a further joint resolution by Congress. There are other controls. For instance, the Government's control of the synthetic rubber plants would permit the Government to control the price of rubber at any time it wished to do so.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Clague used the example of meat. He used meat as one article which had a great influence on the increase in the consumer price index. Does the Senator contemplate that there should be any authority to control any article at all prior to the adoption of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. TAFT. No; my feeling is that so far as price and wage controls are concerned the President could exercise some authority through allocation control, for example. Let us take meat, for example. If there is any article which was proved after the war to be difficult to control, it was meat. It is almost impossible to do so. We reached the point where only a little meat came through legitimate channels, but there was a great deal of meat in the black market. Meat was being slaughtered in small plants or on the farm. Conditions reached such a point that we could not get enough insulin to take care of people who had diabetes because there was not enough processing of carcasses in the regular channels of meat production. We had 90 percent of the meat in the black market. The Senator no doubt remembers that before the 1949 election the President suddenly removed all controls from meat because he was told that the scandals were such it would be impossible to elect a Democratic Congressman anywhere in the country if he allowed controls on meat to stand until the election. That was said at the time. I do not guarantee that it was the only reason why he removed the controls on meat, but people told him that he should take controls off meat because it was impracticable to control the price of meat. It is most difficult to do so. It is much easier to control the price of wheat, corn, and grain products than it is to undertake a price control of meat. If a start is made on meat alone, the control will be a complete failure, in my opinion.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What would be the Senator's opinion with regard to lumber?

Mr. TAFT. Lumber went into the black market, of course. Practically all lumber was in the black market. There was a time after the war when there was no lumber in any lumber yard in the United States. It was trucked directly from the southern mills to the house into which it was put. The price was whatever those who had the lumber desired to charge for it.

I think the Senator has picked out the most difficult articles to control. Let us take, for instance, the shortage of steel. The imposition of consumer-credit control on automobiles would cut tremendously the production of automobiles. If a 50-percent down payment were required on automobiles, I venture to say that the sale of automobiles would be cut by a third. Thereby more than 2,000,000 tons of steel would be saved, which is the additional amount of steel required for the present military program over and above what we had already contemplated would be required. There are many other methods that could be used without going into such detail. I think it is most difficult to try to regulate in detail the price of half a billion sales and purchases which are made every day. It is a tremendously difficult task, and, necessarily, it is an arbitrary one.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I agree with the Senator that it is difficult. We were seeking some way to avoid it, if we could, or at least delay it until the situation became much more serious.

Mr. TAFT. My impression is that if we were to impose a price control on anything, we could find a separated product—a medical product, or something of that kind—on which a price control could be imposed without its effect spreading. However, if we take any major industry or food product and try to fix the price on it and set up a control system I think we would be required to control all the other related products, and finally the entire economy.

Leon Henderson tried to do it on a selective basis. Finally he said it could not be done. At first I was inclined to take the position that it could be done, but I came to the conclusion at the end that if we are to have regulation we must regulate the whole thing, because otherwise we simply shift the purchase from one product to another product. If we fix the price of meat, meat becomes scarce. Therefore everyone buys chickens. Then the price of chickens increase three times over the original price. So we must regulate the price of chickens. Of course it follows that we must then also regulate the price of eggs. We would go from one thing to another until we found that complete control was required.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wonder what the Senator thinks about credit controls on construction, under which the Federal Reserve Board is given authority over conventional bank credit, and the President, as I believe it was stated on the floor yesterday, is given control in the Government field through the Housing Authority.

Mr. TAFT. My impression is—and I have not studied the section carefully—that the bill gives the Federal Reserve Board power over all of it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; it gives the Federal Reserve Board authority over what is called bank credit. It gives the President authority over Government credit. The only way the Federal Reserve Board is brought into the Government picture is by the words "after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board." In committee I move to give the Federal Reserve Board authority over all credit in that field.

Mr. TAFT. I would be inclined to agree with the Senator. I would be inclined to think that the power over bank credit, consumer credit, and housing credit ought to be in the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In the private field under existing regulations banks require more than 60 percent under any circumstances. In other fields it is only 50 percent, where there is not much inflation in the field. The real inflation is in the Government credit, is it not?

Mr. TAFT. In housing?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; in direct loans to GI's and in the FHA-guaranteed mortgages. I think those together cover a good deal of the high increase in housing credit.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Not only that, but the circumstances are much more inflationary where only a 5 percent or 10 percent down payment is required than where 40 percent is required.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The impression was created that the Federal Reserve Board had a responsibility given it without the power to do anything effective.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to deal specifically for a moment with the power of the Government to go into business, which is covered by section 303. I realize that in some fields the Government itself probably may have to go into business. If the President is unwilling to tell us what those fields are so that we may properly limit the power, then I suggest that we retain the power in the Committee on Appropriations to decide what money shall be granted for projects of that kind.

It is significant that in 1949 the President demanded the power to go into business in time of peace, and indicated his belief that the Government should be able to go into the steel business if some Government economist decided that the industry was not expanding as fast as he thought it ought to expand to meet some demand which he foresaw. The President said at that time:

8. To authorize an immediate study of the adequacy of production facilities for materials in critically short supply, such as steel; and if found necessary, to authorize Government loans for the expansion of production facilities to relieve such shortages, and furthermore to authorize the construction of such facilities directly if action by private industry fails to meet our needs.

In accordance was that, the administration had introduced in the House of Representatives the Spence bill, which, in section 203, contained provisions very similar indeed to the provisions in the bill now being considered.

The Spence bill provided:

SEC. 203. (a) Whenever the President determines that Federal procurement is necessary to help achieve the quantity goals established under section 201 (b) for essential metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, he may (1) purchase or make commitments to purchase such essential materials abroad either for Government use or for resale in the United States * * *.

* * * * *

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport, store, process, and refine any materials procured under this section.

At least a suspicion is justified that the President is not solely concerned with the question of production for war purposes. He has himself believed, and probably still believes in what he believed in then, that the Government should have the right to go into business of the kind referred to, independently of any question of war. Certainly I believe, therefore, that we are justified in asking that this power be restricted specifically at least to war purposes.

What I am suggesting is an amendment, if we cannot change the whole power, which at least will require that the money needed for these projects shall be appropriated by Congress. I would not have any great objection to inserting such a provision as that found in a good many bills, the ECA Act, for instance, that pending the actual appropriation the agency may borrow up to, let us say, $100,000,000 from the RFC for some emergency purpose, to be paid back out of the appropriation. But it seems to me that we should strike out on page 36 lines 20 to 25, and on page 37 lines 1 to 20. If that language remains in the bill, we never will see this referred to again. The President will have $2,000,000,000, which will never have to be appropriated, and he can use that $2,000,000,000 to go into any business which he thinks he would like to see the Government go into.

I shall propose to this section an amendment at least providing that appropriation shall be necessary before the power can be used.

Another respect in which the powers of the President are extremely broad is that of allocation. It seems to me this power should be confined to the allocation of materials and facilities required for the war program.

I propose to offer an amendment to provide such a limitation. I offered such an amendment in the committee, and the committee made a slight change, but I do not think it carried out the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to give to the distinguished Senator from Ohio my intepretation of the provision. It is to assist industries to go into war-production business, exploration, and what-not.

The Senator referred to section 302 of the original bill. I assume he also refers to section 303 (a), which follows.

Mr. TAFT. I was talking of section 303 (a), (b), and (c).

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to call the attention of the distinguished Senator to the fact that the objectives of section 302 and 303 are not the same. Section 302 relates to loans to enable companies to go into production. I offered an amendment to the original provision of the original bill, authorizing loans to carry out the purposes of the bill.

We did not know exactly what all the purposes of the bill as originally proposed would be. So I offered an amendment which was agreed to and incorporated in this section, to provide "procurement of materials for national defense." That is all for which they could go into business with government loans.

We did not insert that limitation in section 303 (a), because that relates only to government purchases, not government business or production, only government purchases of war materials.

Mr. TAFT. The Government, under section 303 (a), has the power to make purchases of other than raw materials. It does not say anything about war materials. The language of subparagraph (c) is:

> The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

They can go into the steel business or any other business, and with the powers of purchase, resale, and manufacture, they can go into any business they desire to enter, under section 303.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In the first place, we inserted a preamble that the act is to be carried out within the framework of the American system of competitive enterprise. Then, at my suggestion, in two or three different places in the bill we reiterated "private enterprise, private enterprise."

When we undertook to define national defense, we tried to tie that down to what is actually national defense. It was very difficult for us to write into the bill every conceivable thing which would contribute to national defense, but certainly we put enough into the bill and enough into our report clearly to indicate that these powers should not be used for purposes of social reform, or to put the Government into business which would result in the nationalization or socialization of American industry.

Mr. TAFT. Exactly the same situation existed in World War II. Vague language was used, and it was taken advantage of to justify social reforms and to justify instituting various activities that were not intended by the Congress. A mere expression by Congress today is flouted by Government departments. I have seen the same issue arise in connection with the Veterans' Administration. If a statute makes a certain provision, the officials of an agency may say, "We are not disposed to follow Congress." If we desire to limit powers, the language should be perfectly clear and definite.

As I see it, the definition of national defense on page 67 is so broad that under it the President could allocate for national defense any article in the United States that he finds is needed for the national defense. I think it is somewhat too broad.

I do not criticize the work of the committee, and I quite realize the point made by the Senator from Virginia. But as the Government expands and new bureaus are set up, they do not care what the theory of the act is, they look at the words, and if they want to do something and find that the words can be twisted to enable them to do it, they do what they want. There is no way that can be prevented that I know of, except through the power of appropriation.

The school-lunch program was set up without any authority whatever, and it was carried on for a long time by appropriations only. There were quite a number of activities undertaken by the Federal Security Administration which had no relation to the war whatever, so far as I could see. But Government officials went back to the war acts, pointed to the words contained in them, and we had a pretty hard time to restrain them once they relied on the words.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one brief comment?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Our committee deleted from the bill, by amendments which I offered, powers which went beyond those ever possessed before by any President in any war emergency. But frankly, we did not know how to prepare a defense production bill which would give a good safe administrator the powers necessary for him to do a successful job, and at the same time tie behind his back the hands of some administrator we might not trust. If the Senator knows how to prepare such a bill as that, I shall be glad to consider it. But I desire to say that if some other Senator does not offer it I intend to offer an amendment to the bill whereby the powers granted may be ended upon the adoption of a concurrent resolution by the two Houses, or that any part thereof may be ended by such procedure. If someone, as the Senators fears he may, should take the powers contained in section 302 and section 303 (a) and use them to try to socialize some industry, before we have gone all the way down that road the Congress could take a look-see under the amendment I am proposing, and could wipe out section 302 and section 303 (a) if they were not being used as we intended them to be used, as a defense against an aggressor.

Mr. TAFT. I have seen that done before but as a practical matter it is almost impossible to undo what has been done, after it has been done.

I realize that the Senator from Virginia moved to strike out sections 301, 302, and 303. He made a motion to strike them all out in the committee. I fully sympathized with his action at that time. The Senator was finally convinced that sections 301 and 302 were necessary. I am not suggesting any change in sections 301 and 302. The only amendment I am suggesting to the whole bill, I will say to the Senator, is that we shall not hand the President $2,000,000,000 without any check by the Appropriations Committee on the operation by the Government itself which is authorized under section 303. Now that certainly is a mild provision, and I hope the members of the committee may be glad to accept it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I must admit the correctness of the statement of the Senator from Ohio, that I did offer an amendment to strike out the original language, because I was afraid, as he now says he is afraid, that it was going to be abused. But then I reached the conclusion that it would unduly tie the hands of the executive branch of the Government in doing what may be required to be done so then I went to work to revise the language the committee agreed upon, and which I thought reasonably safeguarded the interests both of us had in mind. But I do not know, and I do not believe any other person knows how to frame a bill that will rise above its administration.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and having sat through all the hearings on the bill, I wonder if the Senator will agree with me that generally speaking, outside of titles IV and V, the bill is quite satisfactory, provided that wherever the term "national defense" is used we substitute "for military supplies," or whatever is needed directly by the military, the armed services, in order to win the Korean War? That is what I tried to do in the committee.

Mr. TAFT. I want to praise the work of the committee. I do not criticize the work of the committee for a moment. The definition of "national defense" on pages 66 and 67 is still somewhat broad.

Mr. CAPEHART. It is too broad.

Mr. TAFT. Yes. The language is:

> The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense.

That really covers any department. Of course, it is clear that it covers the Department of Agriculture. But I think any other department would easily fall within this language. It is not confined to things they want to buy. It covers anything about which they are concerned. It covers any of their activities, such as the Brannan plan, or anything else under the definition of "national defense." While it is better than the original definition, while I think the committee has greatly improved it, I still think it is somewhat broad.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does not the Senator think the definition should be limited to that which is needed directly by the military in order to win the Korean war and in order to do what they should do and what the Congress gives them authority to do under the appropriations?

Mr. TAFT. Yes. Well, what they should do in order to build up the strength of the armed services of the United States. I agree with the Senator from Indiana entirely.

Mr. CAPEHART. I have prepared and will submit two amendments, one to strike title IV and the other to strike title V. Those are the two titles of the bill, of course, that have to do with rationing, price control on every conceivable thing, and wage control. I feel that those two titles should be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I have also prepared a motion to strike out title V.

Mr. CAPEHART. What does the Senator think about title IV?

Mr. TAFT. I personally would strike out title IV, but I was willing to compromise on the basis that it go into effect, by a joint resolution passed by Congress, so when we came back here we would not have a dispute on all the titles of the bill. We would just have a question, yes or no, on a joint resolution. We could act more rapidly in that way. That is just a concession. I prefer the Senator's own amendment.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Some reference has been made to the fact that the bill provides that it is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred within the framework of the American system of competitive enterprise. Referring to the bill, on page 29, I find some weasel words there which seem to me to be of considerable importance in this connection. The bill reads:

> It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act * * * within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

I ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not think that that would give the President the right to do about anything he wanted to do and still contend that he was "within the framework, as far as practicable"?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me so I may answer the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That was my amendment. Does the distinguished Senator from Missouri think that any part of price fixing or wage fixing or rationing is in keeping with the American system of private enterprise? We might have to go into some of that as we did in the last war. I could not sit in committee and put in a phrase that would nullify what might have to be done. So all I could say was, "as far as practicable." You high administrators of this program, do not use these powers beyond what is necessary to do this job and leave our American private enterprise in existence, because it outproduces any other system in the world." That was as far as I knew how to go.

Mr. TAFT. Answering the Senator, I would say that so far as these declarations of policy are concerned I do not pay too much attention to them, and I do not think most lawyers do, and I do not think many Government departments do. They look at the language of the grant of authority. I do not think this limits or expands the grants of authority contained in the words. It may throw a little light on the subject. Even in its present form the language is a kind of a warning to the President as to what he is expected to do. Whether he will do it or not, however, is in his own discretion.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. It certainly is not a limitation.

Mr. TAFT. No; it certainly is not a limitation. As a rule, these declaration-of-policy statements tend to expand the words of an act rather than to limit them.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Whenever a declaration of intention is contained it is very much watered down by the language "as far as practicable."

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. President, I have only one other subject to discuss.

I see no reason for Title V of the bill. The existing law provides effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense. The terms of this title are extremely vague and it is not clear what additional powers the President is seeking in these words. If the President is at any time going to exercise the power of fixing wages, he can set up boards and commissions under the powers granted in title IV. If we wish to give the President some additional power to compel labor and management to abide by his decision or that of some board, we certainly should use much clearer language than appears in section 502. It seems to me that this section should be struck out.

Mr. President, I send to the desk four amendments to be printed and lie on the table. The amendments are in accordance of the general principles on which I have spoken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, the pending defense-production bill confers vast powers upon the President of the United States, but the amendments agreed upon by our Banking and Currency Committee and included in the committee's substitute for Senate bill 3936 bring the current delegation of emergency powers very much in line with those conferred upon the President during World War II. The bill provides over new construction or major additions credit control which was not included in the credit powers of the last war, and it provides for a type of wage stabilization which is different from that of the last war. Wage stabilization is tied to price stabilization by the terms of section 402 (b), which provides for selective controls, as well as by the provisions of section 402 (c), which provides for general controls.

When the OPA bill of the last war was first before the House, I offered an amendment which would have prevented the Wage Stabilization Board from granting a wage increase unless and until the OPA Administrator certified that the proposed increase would not have an inflationary effect. That amendment was defeated and the opponents of the amendment asked the Congress and the American people to rely upon the President to prevent inflationary wage increases.

During that war all labor unions except one lived up to their no-strike-during-the-war agreement, but the wage increases by means of strikes in an essential industry in the midst of war gradually resulted in demands for increases in other industries which, from time to time, were granted. The net result was a pressure upon prices that gradually forced them up.

The present level of wages, fixed principally by collective bargaining, is now at such a high level and the purchasing power of the people is at such a high level that in this new emergency it is not only desirable but absolutely necessary to control wages as well as prices, and to tie the two together in such a way as to prevent future wage increases from exerting an inflationary pressure upon prices.

Under the provisions of the substitute bill, and as interpreted in our report, we feel that it will be mandatory upon those who fix prices to likewise fix wages. We have pointed out on page 32 of the report with respect to section 402 (b) that where we refer to an undue burden upon the seller, we mean a wage increase which would absorb so much of the net profit of the seller of a price-control-led article that a fair and reasonable profit would not be left to him.

Many of the controls carried in the committee substitute bill were recommended to the Congress by the President in 1948, and were embodied in bills presented at that time to the Senate by Senator BARKLEY and to the House by Representative SPENCE. Our Banking and Currency Committee then very definitely and positively refused to report a bill to impose such peacetime controls on our economy.

However, as pointed out in the introductory pages of our report, the situation now confronting us is entirely different. Technically we are not at war, but actually we are; and it is a war the proportions of which no one at the moment can define. Even if the war in Korea should be confined to that area, it might last for a year if the North Korean Communists are reinforced by the Chinese Communists.

We also know that the North Korean Communists have started an unprovoked war of aggression against South Korea under the advice of the Russian Communists, and with the assistance of materials furnished by them. We know that the Communists in other countries may resort to the same tactics in an effort to commit the Armed Forces of our country to defensive action on a broad front.

To meet that threat to our security and, in fact, to our national existence, it is imperative for us to mobilize our economic as well as our military power. Since, as I have indicated, we do not know the full extent of future military commitments, it is necessary for us to delegate to the President powers sufficiently broad to meet future emergencies or contingencies.

In the delegation of such powers it is just as futile to argue that they could not be abused as it would be to argue that an Army general to whom full power over the lives of his men is granted can never make any mistake in the exercise of that power. However, in economic mobilization, as in war mobilization, it is impossible to frame legislation based upon a distrust of those who will exercise the granted powers. The powers necessary to be granted in order that a successful job may be done must be granted under the assumption that they will be properly and wisely exercised. It has, of course, been the observation of every legislator who has burned the midnight oil in the perfection of needed legislation that no perfection of drafting has ever risen above the level of its administration.

In the preparation of the substitute measure, our committee has inserted numerous safeguarding provisions; but the fact remains that the bill delegates wide powers to the President, and its success will be determined by its administration.

It will be noted that the substitute measure provides for three separate and distinct steps in the program of economic mobilization, namely: Voluntary measures, compulsory measures on a selective basis at other than the retail consumer level, and finally, complete control of wages, prices, and rationing at all levels. Until we have complete war mobilization, we cannot deem it to be necessary or desirable to undertake complete economic mobilization.

We are likewise of the opinion that there are other phases of economic mobilization which are necessary and integral parts of a successful program. I refer particularly to three measures now under consideration: First, the elimination of all domestic spending which is not essential to the defense program; second, a measurable increase in income taxes and the imposition of an excess-profits tax; and third, the enactment of a comprehensive renegotiation act.

During World War II it was my privilege to serve on the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatitves which drafted a renegotiation act under which the taxpayers of our Nation were saved over $10,000,000,000 through the recapture of excessive profits on war contracts, and a far greater sum through the repricing of war material, based upon prior contracts which had been renegotiated.

Our experience in World War II taught us that without an effective control on prices and profits, we shall pay entirely too much for war material. We learned that close pricing in a war emergency is an impossibility. Most contracts for munitions are made in haste. In addition, many war contractors are called upon to manufacture items with which they have had no previous experience; and under such circumstances costs and prices cannot be fixed properly until after some experience has been gained. Even with respect to standard items which already are in production, substantial volume increases have a tremendous effect upon costs and profits.

In the present emergency we have been asked to appropriate an aditional $14,000,000,000 to finance the expansion of the armed services. In the very near future we may have to appropriate many additional billions. These enormous increases in Government buying will result in high costs and excessive prices and profits, unless we have adequate protection against these evils. As previously indicated, a part of that protection can be supplied by a comprehensive renegotiation act.

The Renegotiation Act of 1948 is now in effect. The renegotiation of war contracts during World War II proved to be such a satisfactory control against excessive profits that with the advent of the expanded aircraft program in 1948, it was deemed advisable to apply a restricted renegotiation covering to that aircraft procurement. From time to time since 1948 we have amended the Renegotiation Act of 1948, but always on a limited or restricted basis. Generally, it is applicable only in the field of aircraft, and has served to prevent the realization of excessive profits in the procurement of aircraft and aircraft parts. For 1948 the application of the Renegotiation Act of 1948 was limited to procurement under the Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act of that year.

The 1949 amendments to the Renegotiation Act applied only to aircraft and aircraft parts insofar as contracts for such items obligated 1949 fiscal year funds. The 1950 amendments extended the coverage of the Renegotiation Act of 1943 to all negotiated contracts entered into during the fiscal year 1950. I also sponsored that change in the Renegotiation Act, in the Appropriations Committee.

Thus, the 1948 act does not cover contracts resulting from advertised bids which were entered into during 1950 nor does it cover any contracts for any items other than aircraft and aircraft parts which obligated 1949 funds. Moreover, it does not apply to any contracts for less than $1,000 no matter how many of such contracts any single contractor may have, nor does it cover any contracts entered into by any governmental agencies other than the armed services.

The reasons for the limited coverage of the 1948 Renegotiation Act, as amended and extended from time to time, are no longer present. The 1948 act was confined to the portion of procurement which during the past 3 years was greatly increased over ordinary expectations—principally the aircraft expansion program. The war procurement now contemplated goes far beyond this field. Tremendous increase in buying is anticipated not only in the field of aircraft but in every other type of war material. It is these sudden large increases in procurement that breed excessive profits.

There is pending in the House of Representatives a bill (H. R. 9246) to apply renegotiation to all armed services procurement and the procurement of the General Services Administration. This bill specifically provides that the President may bring into renegotiation from time to time as the occasion may demand the procurement of other agencies of the Government such as the Maritime Commission or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It follows very closely not only the framework but the details of the World War II Renegotiation Act, which proved to be such a satisfactory control of excessive profits.

This bill introduced by the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee of the House has been very carefully and painstakingly prepared. Incidentally, the hearings on it in the House Ways and Means Committee commenced yesterday and will extend through today. Its preparation has continued from time to time over the past 3 years and represents, I am informed, the views and thinking of a number of persons both within and without the Government who had extensive experience with the renegotiation of war contracts during World War II. It is broad in its coverage and should prove to be an effective means of holding down excessive prices and preventing the realization of excessive profits on war procurement in the present emergency. The new bill will cover all contracts presently subject to renegotiation under the 1948 act but, of course, goes far beyond the coverage of the present law. It supersedes the 1948 act in such a way that no amounts paid to war contractors will be subject to renegotiation under both acts. In addition to its coverage, it differs from the 1948 act in several other respects. Many of the exemptions from renegotiation contained in the World War II Renegotiation Act and in the 1948 act are not carried in the proposed bill. I am in accord with this general philosophy. I feel that the wisdom of statutory exemption from renegotiation is doubtful at best. If we are to have wartime renegotiation it ought to apply to every form of war procurement and there is little justification for exempting any group or class from its coverage. The bill gives the Renegotiation Board authority to exempt contracts by general classes or types if it finds this action desirable. If exemptions are to be granted, it would seem to me much better for the Renegotiation Board to make such exemptions in the light of a full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances. Under the rapidly changing conditions of wartime procurement, it is impossible for the Congress to prejudge these situations, and it is my own view that the Government's interest would be much better protected by giving the Board sufficient scope and freedom of action to meet circumstances as they arise, and it can exercise the discretionary power which the bill gives it in the light of circumstances prevailing at any given time.

There are only two major respects in which the proposed bill seems to me to be inadequate. First, it would become effective for the entire fiscal year of any contractor during which it became law. Thus, if the bill were enacted in August, for example, it would apply to all contractors who keep their accounts on the basis of the calendar year 1950 and to all fiscal years which had not ended prior to August 1. This, of course, would make the bill retroactive in its effect, which, under the circumstances, I feel is not justified. The moneys have not yet been appropriated and therefore cannot have been received or accrued by any contractor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. If I may be permitted to do so, I desire to call to the attention of the Senator from Virginia an amendment which I discussed with the committee, and on which I desire to have the Senator's comments, in the course of his speech. After consultation with the distinguished Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Indiana, and other Senators, during the hearings, I took it upon myself to offer an amendment, which I hope will conform to their ideas. The amendment is on page 43, line 24, after the word "subsection", to insert a semicolon and the following: "but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials processed from raw materials, and particularly from agricultural commodities, in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I think that is a good amendment, and I certainly hope the Senate will accept it. I have in mind the conversation I recently had with the President of Dan River Cotton Mill, which is one of the largest, if not the largest, cotton mill in the United States. He told me that in order to keep his mill running he was bound to buy cotton in advance for future delivery, that he could not control the price, and so he was committing his company to the purchase of cotton. Then, he said, "What would happen to me if, months later and before that cotton is translated into cloth, they would roll back the price of cloth, irrespective of what the cotton has cost me that went into the cloth?" As I understand, the amendment suggested by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina calls upon those who will do the price fixing and the potential rolling back of prices to take those facts into consideration, and not work any harsh and unfair penalty upon the manufacturer.

Mr. MAYBANK. We want to protect the honorable businessmen and honest business. As the Senator well knows, we do not want any grey markets or black markets, but we do want bona fide operators to be able to contract for the future delivery of goods. The Senator speaks of the Dan River Cotton Mill. He might speak of other mills or of other processing plants. This is August. The cotton mills are now working on cotton goods for next spring. It takes 6 months to finish the product from the raw material to the manufactured product sold by the garment manufacturers.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, it seems to me, with respect to this new renegotiation bill now being considered in the House, that it would be much fairer to the American businessman and, at the same time, would afford adequate protection to the Government, if the application of the act could be confined to amounts received or accrued by contractors after the bill becomes law. Of course, as a corollary, the 1948 act should cover the amounts otherwise subject to that act which are received or accrued by contractors prior to the effective date of this act. For ease of administration and accounting simplicity, the effective date of the proposed bill, and the termination of the 1948 act should coincide with the commencement of a month.

There is another respect in which I think this bill should be changed. For its administration it provides a Renegotiation board consisting of six members—one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Army, one by the Secretary of the Navy, one by the Secretary of the Air Forces, and one by the Administrator of the General Services Administration. The other two are to be designated by the President with the view that they would represent all of the other agencies of the Government whose contracts may be made subject to renegotiation by Executive direction.

It is my firm conviction that the Renegotiation Board should be independent of the armed services procurement agencies. This is not to say that the Board should be completely divorced from the armed services. Cooperation between procurement officials and the Board is indispensable to good administration, but at the same time I am convinced that control of the Board by the armed services would be a mistake.

Those initially charged with the responsibility of making contracts for war procurement are by the very nature of their duties primarily interested in getting the best goods possible under the circumstances as quickly as they can be procured. These procurement officials are by the inherent nature of their duties only secondarily interested in the amounts ultimately paid for these war contracts. It is easy to understand how such procurement officials are not always happy to have their pricing policies second-guessed by the renegotiation officials.

The Renegotiation Board will have an extremely difficult and delicate job under any circumstances. It ought not to be subject to the control of the procurement officials. In my opinion complete independence of action by the Renegotiation Board is indispensable toward securing equality of treatment among contractors, fairness in the application of the law and uniformity of result. Without these virtues renegotiation can never succeed.

It would be my own conviction that the bill should repose all renegotiation authority in the chairman of the renegotiation Board with a provision that the other members of the Board should be advisory to the chairman. If this is done the chairman should be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate and he should be given complete freedom from the procurement agencies.

In essence, renegotiation is a matter of judgment and common sense. Our experience in World War II demonstrates conclusively that if we are to have a satisfactory administration of the Renegotiation Act, we must select a good man, give him ample authority and wide freedom of action and let the chips fall where they will. I am convinced that the American businessman will accept renegotiation in this emergency, as he did in World War II, as a necesary control, so long as he is convinced that the act is being applied uniformly with equality of treatment and with fairness to the businessman and the Government alike.

I am further convinced of the patriotism as well as the courage of the American people and their willingness fully to cooperate in this defense effort if the problems are adequately explained and the type of cooperation needed is clearly indicated.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, before beginning my remarks I desire to have it understood that because of the character of the statements I shall make in my presentation I shall decline to yield until their conclusion. At that time I shall be very glad to yield for any questions which any Senator may desire to ask, and I shall endeavor to answer them, insofar as it may be possible for me to do so.

Mr. President, the American people hate controls. Most of all, they hate governmental controls. Anything of this nature is wholly contrary to our American concept of freedom and our American way of life.

But the American people are also realistic. Perceiving the requirements of war and the demand upon them to accept inconvenience and discomfort, and even sacrifice, if need be, they are undoubtedly willing to accept whatever restrictions and even regimentation may be required of them.

I doubt that it is necessary to convince the American people that they are now beset by a very grave crisis, in which our future freedom and freedom everywhere is at stake. I feel sure that in an all-out effort to protect and preserve these freedoms the American people are willing to go all the way.

In these remarks I shall not discuss all of the aspects of S. 3936. Neither shall I discuss in detail the provisions of this bill. These matters have been covered already most thoroughly and effectively by others who have spoken, and they are very fully considered in the committee report.

Rather, I shall confine this statement to certain features of this legislation which seem to me to be of especial concern at this particular time.

It seems to me that the attitude of most of us toward the present task of national mobilization on the home front may be characterized by total agreement on the goals we seek. That there is some disagreement over the methods or procedures we would adopt for this purpose is only natural.

That the forces of freedom must be maintained—wherever they struggle or are threatened—is nowhere doubted. To this end, Americans at home are faced with a seemingly anomalous situation.

How to impose controls over our economy which will prevent disastrous inflation without severely regimenting it seems to constitute a serious dilemma. It seems to me, however, that this dilemma actually is more imaginary than real.

There is a large area of agreement with respect to the desirability of many of the basic powers which this bill would grant to the President. The power to divert needed resources from peacetime consumption channels to production of the stuff of war and the authority to set up coordinated over-all credit controls are generally accepted as essential for the job we must do. There are few who dispute the merit of including provisions for stockpiling scarce materials and for insuring by Government guaranty defense expansion loans.

Our defense chiefs have estimated that for the current year $23,000,000,000 will be necessary to produce the goods of war. This means that about 10 percent of our annual product of goods and services is being diverted from the normal consumption stream at a time when the postwar demands for consumer goods remain yet unmet. Furthermore, pent-up demand and the very real possibility that this comparatively small portion of our national product may have to be increased drastically, and at a moment's notice, make the potential inflationary pressure too real to be ignored.

As everyone should recognize, Korea may well be only the first symptom of a whole rash of Soviet-sponsored aggressions, in the form of so-called people's revolts, aimed at dissipating eventually our strength and then forcing us into an all-out war. As we would set our future course, past treacheries and present-day uncertainties make precise predictions regarding even the immediate future presumptuous beyond reason.

It is this very impossibility of accurate prediction that makes failure to prepare for any eventuality a frightful gamble.

This bill should both insure a steady flow of war materials and avoid a disruption of our domestic economy which would play directly into Soviet hands. Through its provisions a wide range of adaptable weapons—designed to cope with whatever degree of mobilization may be necessary—would be made immediately available for executive use.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. IVES. As he stated in the beginning, the Senator from New York declines to yield until he has completed his remarks. After he has completed his remarks he will be very glad to yield.

Also included, however, are adequate safeguards against the possibility of haphazard or arbitrary or capricious exercise of the powers granted. The authority to be delegated would be as precisely restricted as is possible under existing uncertainties. Moreover, means for the operation of an effective congressional checkrein have been included.

In the first place, where controls over prices and wages are concerned, the dangers of piecemeal application have been largely obviated by linking price controls to wage stabilization and by requiring at the consumer level the blanket exercise of both powers simultaneously. The interdependence of prices and wages could then no longer escape the convenient memory of a susceptible administrator.

Powers are granted to regulate wholesale prices on a selective basis. Recent wholesale price jumps of many vital commodities leave little basis for disputing the necessity for this provision.

For instance, the wholesale price of rubber has risen over 100 percent since pre-Korea; tin has skyrocketed 33 percent; and cottonseed oil has advanced a fourth of its June 23 price. Prices of all these products—needed for both defense and home consumption—illustrate a rise that, without controls, may develop into full-fledged inflation.

But even when control power would be exercised selectively, on the wholesale level, no wage increase could be granted unless it were first shown that such increase would neither bring about an increase in price nor impose an undue burden upon the seller.

At the consumer level—and this is the consumer of whom I speak—controls would be instituted only across the board and could include rationing. Here the maleffects of selective application would be likely to outweigh any evil which over-all controls might bring. The piecemeal exercise of consumer control would exert such unbearable pressure on unregulated products that prices would almost certainly spiral. At the same time wage stabilization would be mandatory, and the power to institute either price control or wage control would be contingent upon the immediate exercise of its counterpart.

I have been impressed with the argument of those who are supporting a so-called trigger or safety-valve formula, by which to impose automatically at the consumer level controls over prices, wages, and rationing. At first glance this proposal seems to contain plausible inducements, but a more careful consideration of it discloses its possible pitfalls.

Any plan by which these controls would become perfunctorily effective when the cost-of-living index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics might rise a certain percentage above a given level seems to me to be of dubious value. To be sure, it might tend to restrain the action of those forces which have been propelling the cost-of-living index upward in recent weeks, but it might just as easily have the effect of accelerating a rise in the cost-of-living index to the point where controls would have to be imposed by law, regardless of other conditions which might exist at the time.

This kind of plan might act something like a Frankenstein—over which no person or group of persons could have any influence if it were to go beserk—until it would have reached the fateful objective which the law might allow. This seems to me the course of irresponsibility, by which the Congress would seek to pass the buck and the Executive would be powerless to act, no matter what the circumstances.

On the other hand, I have been no more impressed with the proposal to place with the Congress the duty finally to put into effect such stand-by controls, or any part of them, as we may authorize at this time. Adoption of such a proposal would impair the effectiveness of such controls as we may now authorize the executive to impose at once; it would serve as a handicap to efforts to curb inflation; it would place with the Congress vital administrative responsibility which the Congress should never assume in time of war; it could deprive the executive of the capacity to act in the event of a sudden critical emergency when immediate action would be imperative; it would belittle the gravity of the Korean crisis; it would deny the reality of the great peril which threatens the nation.

A second safeguard embodied in this bill, and heretofore not included in price control legislation, is a broad provision for the judicial interpretation of administrative regulations by courts in the jurisdiction where the dispute might arise. The purpose of this provision is to alleviate the financial strain of costly litigation when all cases must come before the Emergency Court of Appeals, here in Washington. Under this bill, only suits either to enjoin enforcement or to test constitutionality of an administrative control regulation would be required to come before this specialized court.

In the drafting of the bill, careful consideration was given also to the problem of assuring a steady supply of the tools of war—free from the interruptions of labor disputes.

The great necessity for primary reliance on voluntary cooperation in the conduct of labor-management relations—even in wartime—stems from a very basic constitutional distinction. The right of government to impress a person into military service has always been distinguished from any right to force one person to work for the profit of another, even though that work may be the production of the materials of war.

The increasing complexity and interdependence of modern society, however, have forced labor, along with all other segments of the economy, to accept regulation in the public interest. The growing dependence of those who do the fighting upon those who make the weapons with which to fight has made this never completely clear distinction between those who serve in the Armed Forces and those who work in the plants—in wartime—even less distinct.

In fact, the courts have upheld the constitutionality of the national emergency provisions of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, which can require that workers stay on the job for at least 80 days when a strike would seriously threaten the national health and safety in peacetime.

By the terms of the pending bill, the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 would be controlling in matters affecting the relationship between labor and management, including collective bargaining. It seems to me, however, that this is as far as we should go in legislation of this type.

It should be remembered in this connection that during the period of the present emergency it is expected that the Congress will not adjourn, but, at most, will recess only for very limited periods of time. If, therefore, any serious work stoppage should arise or even be threatened, in spite of the terms of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, the Congress would be readily available to pass such legislation as might be needed to meet the difficulty.

Charges of abdication of congressional responsibility and fears of dictatorial bureaucratic control serve only to obscure the basic issue of national security.

In the formulation of this bill, provision has been made for congressional restraint upon such power as would be delegated.

The Congress has neither the time nor the special competence necessary to administer economic controls. In any case, this is not a proper function of the legislative branch.

For the implementation of authority which must be delegated to the Executive, the bill would require that the head of any new control agency must be confirmed by the Senate. In addition, it is expected that such an appointee would be especially qualified to carry out the details of congressional authorization. This is the person who must advise the President with respect to technical decisions as to how and when controls should be applied to best effectuate those policies which the Congress would have established.

Charges of congressional abdication obscure the fact that responsibility for basic policy decisions—as always—would remain with the Congress, and that a special legislative "checkrein" would be included to insure continuing legislative surveilance. Aside from the standard equipment of congressional control, such as confirmation of agency heads and annual appropriations, this bill contains a special provision for a joint congressional—so-called watchdog committee, to be created for the purpose of aiding the standing committees of the Congerss by reviewing continually the plans and programs which would be carried out under the act.

A second unfounded charge—fear of dictatorial governmental regimentation under power granted—has been levelled against the bill; but every feasible limitation has been placed upon the broad powers which it would grant. The bill itself, in fact, is designed in the hope that under it over-all regulation would be unnecessary.

Comprehensive credit control, extending to both Government and private new construction, should relieve inflationary pressures before "across-the-board" regulation would be required. Credit control, coupled with higher taxes to drain off excess purchasing power, might alone do the job.

But if these indirect methods should prove insufficient, then the direct means to stifle inflation before it would get out of hand would be immediately available. Even then, these over-all direct powers would be limited in the first instance to the life of the bill—a period of less than 2 years. After that time authority for their continuation, and, indeed, for the continuation of the act itself, would have to be specifically regranted by the Congress by affirmative action.

An already serious inflationary condition in the country and the realities of daily living make inevitable the conclusion that standby consumer controls should be authorized now. Furthermore, the governmental machinery essential to their application should be established without delay.

Prices of coffee, sugar, and bread—to cite a few—according to a special spot survey of national markets prepared for me by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, yesterday reached all-time record retail peaks. Yesterday morning coffee brought a national average of 82 cents per pound, up 10 percent since June 23; a 10-pound bag of sugar sold for $1, in contrast to its 94 cents pre-Korea price; while bread has risen on an average of over 1 penny a loaf. These are products purchased daily by American housewives. Legislative inaction now would further aggravate the hardship that these prices have brought to every American family.

As I have emphasized time and time again in the past, I am unalterably opposed to unwarranted governmental regulation and control. I was strongly opposed to such controls in 1946. But conditions in 1946 were quite different from those which we now face. In 1946 it was a matter of dropping controls as rapidly and intelligently as possible in order to restore a peacetime economy as quickly as possible. Now it is a matter of as much and as rapid mobilization for our national defense as may be necessary to meet whatever the future may bring.

Controls authorized, or even imposed, now seem a small sacrifice of liberty in terms of what failure properly to mobilize our economy may ultimately bring. Surely there can be no question of choice between acceptance of limited governmental regulation and control, on a temporary basis, by honest-to-goodness Americans, and the possible alternative of permanent and absolute control administered by a Soviet commissar.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I want it definitely understood that I am not wholly satisfied with everything in the bill. I know that I am very likely to be joined in this feeling by every member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. We recognize that there are things about it which might be improved. I am sure I join the other members of the committee in the statement that I stand ready to support any amendment which may be offered, which has real promise of improvement to the bill. But at the same time I want it again understood that I shall not support any amendment which I do not think will improve it. By and large, Mr. President, the bill, it seems to me, is as good a product in spite of the defects it has, as we can agree upon at this time.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Some time ago I asked the Senator if he would yield, but the Senator said he preferred to finish his remarks. Some of the questions I had intended to ask the Senator at the time I previously asked him to yield, he has answered by his remarks.

As chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I wish to say that the bill is a better bill than it would have been had it not been for the untiring efforts of the Senator from New York, for his constant attendance at the meetings, and for the knowledge he shared with us. I agree with him that the bill is not a perfect one. No bill of this nature could be perfect.

I was very much impressed when the Senator some time ago used the word "gamble" when he said we had to do something or do nothing. I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator that something should be done lest, as I remember the Senator's remarks, the Communist activities spread beyond Korea. Am I correct?

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York would like to point out that he feels one of the great divisions of opinion at this time is due to a difference in the acceptance of what might be termed a major premise. There are those who feel that the Korean situation, the Korean crisis, is only an incident; that it is nothing more than a police affair to be resolved by the United Nations. I respect the opinion and the attitude of those who entertain that view, because I think they are honest in it; but I cannot accept it. I believe that the Korean incident is only a part, a very sad part, a tragic part, to be sure, of a world-wide situation to which the American people can no longer afford to be blind.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator. That is why the Banking and Currency Committee, after executive hearings, executive sessions with General Bradley and Secretary Symington and others, brought the bill to the floor of the Senate. If the majority of the committee had believed that the Korean situation was only an incident we would not be before the Senate, in my judgment, at such an early date as this asking for a vote on the bill.

Mr. IVES. If I thought the Korean situation was only an incident I would be fighting the bill as strongly as I could fight.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from New York would not be fighting it any more strongly than would the chairman of the committee.

Mr. IVES. Not any more strongly than the chairman of the committee; I will admit that. I wish to pay my earnest respects to the chairman of the committee, without whose guidance and judgment the bill would not have been brought to the Senate as quickly as it was.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. First let me congratulate the Senator from New York for his characteristically public-spirited and clear-headed exposition.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York is grateful for those remarks, but he is a little suspicious as to what may be coming.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I have no guile. I think the Senator from New York has made it perfectly clear that he, like the rest of us, does not want to see individual or collective price controls invoked unless they become absolutely necessary.

Mr. IVES. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And that he is in favor of the bill simply because of his fear, and I think it is a well-grounded fear, that we may wake up some morning and find ourselves in a very difficult military situation, and that in such a situation there should be legislation on the books which will permit the Executive to act on the home front in economic matters.

Mr. IVES. Let me answer the distinguished Senator from Illinois in this way. It is not exactly a fear which the Senator from New York entertains. It is a firm belief that unless we do something, unless we are realistic about the crisis with which we are faced, we will wake up some morning to the realities to which the Senator from Illinois alludes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York yields steadily to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is not retreat in depth, however.

Mr. IVES. No; that is all right, so long as we keep it spread out.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does not the Senator from New York feel, important as this legislation undoubtedly is, that even more important is a financial and credit policy under which the Government will pay for the added costs of military preparation out of taxes, rather than being compelled to go to the banks and borrow from them?

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, although the Senator from New York mentioned it, he did not discuss the matter of taxation to any extent in his prepared remarks, because of the fact that that is not directly before us, and is not wholly germane to the bill. But the Senator from New York wants it understood that he probably feels as strongnly as does the distinguished Senator from Illinois that, situated as we are at the moment, insofar as it is humanly possible to do so we should carry on the present armament program on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I congratulate the Senator from New York again for this added display of clear headedness, to which we have become accustomed.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York again thanks the Senator from Illinois, but he is again suspicious.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am sorry if my past conduct has given rise to such a suspicion.

Mr. IVES. I am very grateful, anyway, to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that if we do not pay for the current cost of the war by taxation, and are compelled to go to the banks to borrow credit from them, the net result will be that the banks will create credit upon their books against which the Government will draw, and that the ratio of money and credit to goods will increase, with a consequent rise in the price level? If that were to happen, then, even if we had individual and collective price controls, they would be frail protection against the flood of inflation which would be let loose upon us, and would it not be camparable to trying to put up a straw dam in a ravine that was experiencing a flash flood?

Mr. IVES. Let the Senator from New York now in turn extend to the Senator from Illinois a genuine compliment. The Senator from New York recognizes the Senator from Illinois for his great capacity, not alone in legislation and in the grasp of great problems, but particularly in the field of economics, wherein he excels to such an extent that he is recognized today as one of the great economists of the country.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I begin to feel suspicious.

Mr. IVES. Of course, the Senator made such a clear presentation by the question he asked me that I do not need to answer him now. One thing, however, which the Senator from Illinois was very careful to avoid in his build-up to the final conclusion he reached in his question, was that by the process which can occur unless safeguards of a type to which the Senator refers are imposed, the American dollar will shrink to nothing, or less than nothing. That is the important thing about it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say that I felt almost as suspicious of the compliments the Senator from New York has paid to me as he apparently felt about my kind words to him.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I suggest that we now abandon all suspicion, and that we talk very frankly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Is it not imperative, therefore, that while both of us agree that some bill of this nature should be enacted, yet neither the Congress nor the administration nor the public should think that inflation is guarded against by the passage of this measure, because if we do not pay from current taxes the costs of the armament program, but if we have to borrow from the banks, the result will be such a pent-up amount of purchasing power that we shall not be able to block the inflationary gap, and the result will be a tremendous increase in prices?

Mr. IVES. I agree; but I also wish to point out that without the enactment of this bill, even though the approach to which the Senator from Illinois refers is taken, there will be a big loophole in the entire structure, and the structure will be likely to crash.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I agree with the Senator from New York that I regard some such measure as this one as necessary to be enacted, but I think the danger is not guarded against merely by the passage of this bill if we do not pay for current costs out of current income, rather than by creating checkbook money which will merely build up prices.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I think there is another aspect to the problem which must be taken into consideration in that respect, namely, that so far as it is humanly possible to do so, the cost of government on the domestic front must be reduced to an absolute minimum. That is just as important as anything we are talking about at this time, and I know that the distinguished Senator from Illinois fully agrees with me in that statement.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I not only agree with the Senator from New York, but I am still bleeding from almost every pore from the kicking around which has been received during recent months as a result of my efforts to achieve economy. I have had to put absorbent cotton on almost every vein.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I pay tribute to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder whether the Senator from Illinois is bleeding from his pores because of the fact that he voted for the ECA appropriations. In connection with the remarks which have been made about the economy drive, and apropos of the mutual admiration society between the Senators——

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I would observe in that connection that it is a question of interpretation. I also voted against including the ECA appropriations in the 10 percent reduction proposal.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not questioning a Senator's right to vote for the ECA appropriations; but when Senators talk about what they have done in an effort to achieve economy and in their efforts to vote for economy, and how they are bleeding from their pores because of their efforts in that battle, I wonder whether the Senator is bleeding from his pores as a result of voting for the expenditures proposed to be made for the ECA program.

Mr. IVES. Yes; but I would remind the Senator from Nebraska that there is such a thing as being penny-wise and pound-foolish.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I should like to ask the Senator how much in the way of taxes he would vote to assess on the American people. Let us say that the budget rises to $65,000,000,000 or $75,000,000,000 this year. Would the Senator from New York want to pay for all of that this year?

Mr. IVES. We could not pay for all of it this year, if the budget went up that much.

I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he has any knowledge that the budget will be that large this year.

Mr. WHERRY. I say to the distinguished Senator from New York—and that is the subject of my next question—that that will depend on whether the present action is a police action or whether it is an all-out war. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator about that.

Mr. IVES. I have answered that already.

Mr. WHERRY. Have we declared war?

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I should like to point out that years ago a declaration of war ceased to be a necessity.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator mean during the past 16 or 18 years?

Mr. IVES. Since we have had some of the prevalent new ideologies.

Mr. WHERRY. I completely agree.

The point I am trying to make is that without a declaration of a national emergency or without a declaration of war, and with the present administration telling the American people that the Korean action is only an incident, certainly there is a difference between a budget which will meet that requirement and a budget which will do what I think the Senator from New York thinks we should do—and I agree with him.

Mr. IVES. Very well; now the Senator from Nebraska and I are getting somewhere along the same trail.

I have criticized the administration for not being candid enough with the American people. These are times which call for candor—candor from the highest places possible. Insofar as our national security and protection and safety will permit, that candor should be forthcoming.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from New York for that observation. I think we are on exactly the same trail, judging from the observation he made, and I deeply appreciate his statement.

Now I will answer the question the Senator asked me: I myself believe the Korean situation is not an incident. I myself believe that the program that is being requested by the military will require huge appropriations. Because of that fact, I believe that the Senator from New York is on sound ground when he states that the American people should be so advised, and that that situation should be prepared for, in an attempt to stop the inflationary spiral.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I did not say that the American people should be advised that the Korean situation is an incident. I clearly indicated in my earlier reply to one of the questions asked by the Senator from Illinois that I have a great deal of respect for those who view this matter as merely an incident, something to be brushed off. I do not criticize those who honestly believe that, but I cannot accept that premise.

Mr. WHERRY. I think the Senator from New York misunderstood me.

Mr. IVES. If I did, I apologize.

Mr. WHERRY. My statement was that the Korean situation is not an incident; and I said that in agreeing with the Senator from New York that this situation may become world-wide, and therefore may require huge appropriations in order that we may prepare for it, I think that because of that fact the American people should be so advised and should be told that they are going to be taxed heavily and that they must tighten their belts, and that there will be an inflationary spiral unless the Congress enacts legislation sufficient to stop that spiral.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I myself have been talking along that line, and I can only agree with the Senator from Nebraska. I feel very strongly that the time has come when the American people must realize that the great crisis with which we are faced now may not be over tomorrow or next year or in the next 10 years, but it may require at least a generation to overcome and resolve; the American people must adopt the attitude that we are in for very tough days ahead.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that observation is in complete accord with what I said a moment ago. I think the question can be answered on that basis, because it seems to me there is a difference between an approach on the theory that the Korean situation is an incident which may level off and an approach on the theory that in the next 3 or 4 years there must be appropriations sufficient to enable us to meet any emergency. It is my opinion that the Congress must appropriate amounts larger than any which have been requested as yet.

Therefore, I think the budget for 1950–51 will far exceed any estimates which have been made thus far.

Mr. IVES. In such case, we may not be able to pay for all of it in 1 year by means of taxation.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the point.

Mr. IVES. But I should like to point out that I believe that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York and the Senator from Illinois mean that this situation will require the exaction of taxes to the extent of our ability to pay, in order to go along on that program, then, of course——

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I think it should be understood in that connection that the Senator from Illinois—and I am very sure I can speak for him in this regard—and certainly the Senator from New York were talking about the proposed expenditures with which we are actually acquainted.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the proposed budget amounting to approximately forty-five or fifty billion dollars.

Mr. IVES. That is correct, and that is what we are talking about.

Mr. WHERRY. Once again let me say that it is a question of the approach we make to the subject matter. If the budget is to be approximately forty-five or fifty billion dollars, that is one thing; but if the budget is to be sixty-five or seventy billion dollars, that is quite another thing.

As I interpret the statement the Senator from New York has made——

Mr. IVES. I said what I meant.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator from New York meant what he said a while ago, then he did not definitely state what the budget would be. I asked him what he thought the budget would be.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from Nebraska was not present when I was making my preliminary remarks. I pointed out what I expected, insofar as what is known. I cannot contemplate what cannot be known.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I should like to ask another question.

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I think I understand what the Senator from New York meant when he said that taxes should be increased sufficiently to permit us to proceed on a pay-as-you-go basis. Certainly that will mean taxing the American people to the utmost of their ability to pay.

Mr. IVES. I said we should do so insofar as it is humanly possible. The Senator from Nebraska will note that I said that, if he will examine the record.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with that statement.

Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to ask some detailed questions, if I may, concerning the provisions found on page 77 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. It has to do with voluntary agreements or controls, which are to be approved by the President. Section 712 (a) provides:

> In order to carry out the purposes declared in section 2 of this act, the President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, banking, insurance, and agriculture with a view to encouraging the making, by persons engaged in industry, business, financing, and agriculture, of voluntary agreements approved by the President—

It then sets forth in the subdivisions the ones which the committee apparently feels are good, namely, "(1) providing for allocation of transportation facilities and equipment." Is there any evidence in the record as to the formula by which that would be carried out, if the President were given this authority?

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York does not have in mind any evidence on that point.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from New York have any observation he desires to offer on it?

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York has no observation to offer on it. He would assume that in doing that job the administrator—in this case, the President, or someone named by him—would be responsible for it and would use common sense.

Mr. WHERRY. How about subsection 2, "providing for priority, allocation, and inventory control of scarce materials necessary for the national defense"? Does that mean that only defense articles are to have priority, or does it mean that it applies clear across the board, including civilian allocation?

Mr. IVES. In that particular instance, it is referring to the national defense.

Mr. WHERRY. Does not the Senator feel that that should be made clear?

Mr. IVES. It should never be forgotten that in the matter of national defense, the civilian population is just as much involved as are those in the actual armed services of the country.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I read that paragraph it sounds at least as if what the committee intended was to have the voluntary agreements apply only to "providing for priority, allocation, and inventory control of scarce materials necessary for the national defense." Does that mean strategic materials at the source, or does it go clear through the economy, including all production, all distribution, and so forth, as they affect the civilian economy?

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York would like to answer the question raised by the Senator from Nebraska, which is a very fair one, by referring the Senator from Nebraska to page 66, section 702 (d), where the term "national defense" is defined as follows:

> The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

The Senator from New York would like to observe that he, himself, does not think it is exactly a perfect definition of "national defense." Any definition which includes the term being defined within the definition itself is not generally construed to be a very perfect definition. But that is what is meant.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I read the definition, certainly subparagraph 2 of section 712 is not all-inclusive, so far as priorities are concerned, with which I think the economy will be confronted almost immediately. Let us take, for example, any of the foods, fuel oil, or steel, but particularly foods, and the distribution thereof. It seems to me that that subparagraph should go further than the definition that has just been read.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York would suggest to the able Senator from Nebraska that if he feels that way about it, it might be a good idea for him to prepare an amendment along the line he is indicating. The Senator from New York would have no particular objection to it, if the amendment were of a proper nature, but he would again point out that presumably these matters are to be handled by someone with intelligence.

Mr. WHERRY. From my experience during the past 5 or 6 years, I should say that everything the Congress can write into the act probably will be a good guide to those who are going to administer it, even though they may have had experience.

Mr. IVES. Let me point out one thing in that connection. I think that is a beautiful thought, and there is no question about that. But if the act is cluttered up with all these particular things, we would probably wind up by freezing everything down so tightly that it would be impossible of administration.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for another question, perhaps I may state what I have in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In the distribution of any commodity, as, for example, fuel oil, this particular subsection, as worked out, would be applied on a voluntary basis. In former years it was worked out on a formula which provided that the producers should distribute their products on a quota basis, percentage-wise, to the customers or to the distributors, on a basis of purchases, say, for 2 years in advance. In other words, take a producer of petroleum products, a distributor, and a retailer. It was found in the Small Business Committee, in many of the oil hearings conducted by that committee—and this is but one of the segments of the economy—that when materials became scarce those who produced them attempted to retain control clear through, from the producer to the retail level, and, in fact, to the consumer, and that immediately those who were dependent on that source of supply found that they had no source of supply and must look elsewhere. It is my feeling, if there is to be an attempt to provide priorities and allocations across the board for both the military and the civilian economy, that if it is put into effect, it ought to be put into effect through a program about which we would have something to say. That is the point I am trying to raise.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York very likely would support such an amendment, if the Senator from Nebraska has one to offer, assuming it would be workable.

Mr. WHERRY. I am asking the questions in order to find out what was in the mind of the military. If the Banking and Currency Committee means that all we are to do is to regulate strategic materials necessary for the national defense, that is one thing. If it is to go clear across the board, that is another thing.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York in this connection would like to point out that, at the beginning of section 712, it is indicated that this is to be done through a voluntary process.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. IVES. There is nothing mandatory about any of it, in this particular part of the section.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not disagreeing with the statement that this is a discretionary power, to be used in the discretion of the President. But my feeling is that if the President elects to put it into effect and exercises that right, then the provisions of the four subparagraphs of section 712 should be so framed that the Congress would have a say as to how those priorities are to be extended across the board and into all the levels of our economy. I think I gave one illustration which very clearly shows the position in which many dealers would find themselves, in case the conditions were parallel or similar to those in which they found themselves in 1945, 1946, and 1947.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York certainly would not be opposed to implementation, if it may be called that, of the bill by that process, assuming that it can be done and still leave the bill workable.

Mr. WHERRY. Voluntary agreements or controls were satisfactorily used with respect to fuel oil, newsprint, steel, and several other basic commodities, which I am satisfied will be in short supply. Lumber is another one.

Mr. IVES. I should like to observe that I see no reason why that process should not be followed voluntarily, under the terms of the bill. However, if the Senator from Nebraska feels it should be written into the bill, and it can be written in properly, very likely I should support it.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I wanted to get the background, because if it runs clear across the board I think amendments should be offered, at least, suggesting a formula.

Mr. IVES. I should like to caution against the danger of writing into a bill too much detail, so that we actually freeze the operation of the act. We must leave a certain amount of latitude to the administrator. Generally speaking, if we have a sound and sensible administrator, the greater the latitude, the better the administration.

Mr. WHERRY. The difficulty under the last control act was that the administrator apparently could not arrive at a formula which was at all satisfactory. Based upon the experience of 3 or 4 years, I am satisfied that the voluntary allocation formula ought to work out very satisfactorily.

Mr. IVES. That is what the bill permits.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

There is one more question that I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he will yield further.

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In the matter of whether this is a national emergency, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator his interpretation of the declaration of policy which is found on page 28 of the bill. Just what does that declaration mean? Why is it necessary to have it in the bill?

Mr. IVES. In the first place, if the distinguished Senator from Nebraska would be willing to grant the courtesy, I should like to ask the Senator if he has any objection to the declaration of policy.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not sure. That is the reason I wanted to find out what the committee had in mind when the declaration was written into the bill.

Mr. IVES. Earlier today the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] discussed that question to some extent. The idea is to give a background and a basis on which the act is formulated and by which it will be made operative. I cannot see anything particularly against the declaration of policy. I think the declaration of policy, generally speaking, is representative of rather sound sense and probably basic American doctrine.

Mr. WHERRY. There is nothing of particular significance in lines 7 to 13 except that they recite some history of the situation, and we are now reaffirming what we have already done, legally, I suppose, with regard to our obligations to the United Nations and mutual defense. The declaration is used only as a background.

Mr. IVES. It has merely a historical reference. In this connection, I should like to find out why, earlier, some Senator, which one I do not now recall, ridiculed the declaration of policy as being worthless. I am not a lawyer, as the Senator from Nebraska knows, and I am at a great disadvantage in a matter of this kind, but I have had a little legislative experience over the years. I know from that experience that a declaration of policy goes a long way in determining the legislative intent.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. That is the reason I asked the question of the distinguished Senator. I should like to get the legislative history. If it is only basic background——

Mr. IVES. I can assure the Senator that this declaration of policy is perfectly innocent. There is no catch in it.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not mean to infer that there was a catch in it. I simply asked to have the Senator make an observation as to what was intended by the declaration of policy, especially lines 7 to 13, inclusive, and the Senator has told me it is only basic background and history, bringing us up to date—to the Korean situation.

Mr. IVES. It seemed rather necessary to put something like this into the declaration of policy, because it is largely on account of our connection with the United Nations that our present status is as it is.

Mr. WHERRY. But there is nothing new in it. It is merely basic background.

Mr. IVES. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I may say to my good friend from New York that I did not have an opportunity to hear his entire address this afternoon, but I shall read it with great interest over the week end.

Mr. IVES. It is good for insomnia.

Mr. MORSE. I am sure it will keep me wide awake. I should like to say to the Senator from New York that I shall rely heavily upon his judgment in connection with this bill. I have not had an opportunity to study the details of the bill to which the Senator from New York addressed himself this afternoon. My questions will be directed primarily to the so-called labor disputes section of the bill and certain appeal procedures which I should like to discuss briefly with the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. IVES. I went into that rather extensively, not going into the actual terminology of title V, but with reference to what is contemplated in the bill in the matter of labor relations and labor disputes.

Mr. MORSE. I shall not question the Senator from New York on that particular feature of title V, but, with the permission of the Senator and of the Senate, I should like to preface my questions with a very brief observation on the situation as I see it in respect to the need of economic mobilization in America. I do not ask anyone to agree with me, but for the RECORD I want to make a statement of what I think is the serious danger which confronts America and which calls for economic as well as military mobilization.

I think the situation in the world today is so serious that it is the duty of the administration and of the Congress to notify the American people of the great truth which the Senator from New York mentioned this afternoon when he said, in effect, that we are not going to get out of this emergency this year or next year. There is a possibility, as the Senator from New York stated, that we are confronted with a generation of conflict in the great ideological war taking place for men's minds. In that respect, as one Member of this body, I completely agree with the Senator from New York, and I think he has done the American people a service by emphasizing that they must awaken very quickly to the fact that the chips are now down on the table of international relations in this world as far as the danger of war is concerned. The Korean incident, serious as it is as a war, may be but a forerunner and an indication of what is to come. The American people and their representatives in the Congress and their President in the White House should recognize that now is the time for total mobilization of the economy of the Nation as well as the total mobilization of its manpower.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I am delighted at that expression by the Senator from Oregon, which is very much in line with what I have previously expressed.

Mr. MORSE. I am seeking to reinforce the views of the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. I am very grateful to the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. I think there is only one thing that the Russian leaders will understand now——

Mr. IVES. Force.

Mr. MORSE. At least a thorough mobilization of our forces, both economic and military. The determination of the American people to meet every aggressive action and to do it with total mobilization of our economy and of our manpower must be made clear to Russia. But there arises the question of how we are going to mobilize this economy of ours. I may say to the Senator from New York that I am sick in the pit of my stomach over the greed I have seen manifested in this country since the beginning of the Korean incident. Selfish forces have tried to step into the picture to get theirs while the getting is good, while, at the same time, our boys are dying in Korea to save our free-enterprise system and everything for which political and economic freedom in America stands. I have no tolerance at all for people who think that, while the blood of American boys is being spent, they can selfishly take excessive profits at the expense of the letting of that blood.

Regardless of what the political consequences to the junior Senator from Oregon may be, I say here and now that I stand for total economic mobilization of this country to meet the Russian threat which confronts the world. Therefore, the questions I wish to ask the Senator from New York go to the issue of whether in this bill, as it is presently drafted, sufficient power is lodged in the President of the United States and in the administrative agencies set up under the bill, with policing and checking by Congress, to see to it that we draft the money of America as well as the boys of America. We must direct the economic forces of the country to the winning of this fight for freedom against Russia. Unless such provision is made, I am satisfied we shall not win the fight. We must not be caught off balance. I am satisfied the first time Russia thinks we are in a position where she can unbalance us and lick us, she will try to do it. That is why I say in the questions I am about to ask the Senator from New York——

Mr. IVES. Does the Senator wish me to answer the first question?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. IVES. That was really a $64 question. The Senator from New York thinks the bill possesses all essential powers which the Executive should have at this time. In answer to the question of the Senator from Oregon, the Senator from New York would like to point out a fact to which the Senator from Oregon has inferentially referred, and that is that the bill does provide for a watchdog committee. The watchdog committee would be in constant operation. Therefore it can be easily determined if insufficient power is granted, or if the power which has been granted is being abused, which is equally as important.

Mr. MORSE. I do not think that provision of the bill can be stressed too much, because, having gone through World War II as a member of one of the great control bodies, the War Labor Board, it is my opinion that closer congressional checking by a so-called watchdog committee—if we wish to use that term—would have been very helpful. What we must watch out for is to see that the check between the legislative and administrative branches is provided in such a way as to be workable. We must watch out for the type of check that I now wish to mention. We must be on the alert to prevent stalling, delaying, or any dilatory procedure that prevents a finality of decision.

I stress the point because I am somewhat worried—and I have not studied it carefully—by one approach that is being made in this bill which would delay a finality of decision. I say that because when we are in a great national emergency and are mobilizing the economy of the country for a war effort, we must have men in a position where they can say, "Boys, this is it. There is not anything more. This is final. This is the final result." The appeal procedure must not be such as to encourage dilatory tactics.

My next question goes to whether or not we are leaving the check in the watchdog committee of the legislative branch so that the committee can step in if an abuse develops, or add power if the administration is not going far enough in mobilizing the economy, or whether we provide an elaborate appeal procedure which would make it possible through legalistic techniques to stall final decisions on these matters, with the result that there would be caused within our economy confusion rather than teamwork.

Mr. IVES. The Senator's remarks embrace several questions. However, in answer to the Senator I should like to point out that of course the possibility exists that the bill may not work as easily as the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New York would like to have it work. However, the Senator from New York feels the provision, with regard to the contemplated court procedure, is a very salutary one, at least in the first instance. The Senator from New York feels very strongly that the people of the United States, particularly the ones who are likely to be affected or helped by the act, would be more cooperative with this kind of approach than a more strict or stringent approach would permit or occasion them to be.

So far as expedition or speed with which the interpretation, implementation, and administrative part of it can be put into execution is concerned, that rests with the President of the United States, where it should rest.

Mr. MORSE. I agree.

Mr. IVES. He is the Chief Executive and chief administrator of the country. If we cannot trust him now, we shall never have any occasion to trust him again.

Mr. MORSE. We must simply rely on the constitutional provision that in time of war or great emergency the President enjoys powers which he has only in such times.

Mr. IVES. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. The Supreme Court of the United States has yet completely to define or delimit the war powers of the President of the United States. I happen to think that they are of such proportions that it is impossible to lay down any limits upon them, so long as it is found, as a matter of fact, that the exercise of a particular power is necessary for the successful prosecution of a war. If it is necessary, I think it is contemplated within the meaning of the war powers of the President that he can take such action as is necessary as Commander in Chief to prosecute the war, subject to direct legislative controls or prohibitions by the Congress.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York yields to the judgment and ideas of the distinguished Senator from Oregon, who is a very distinguished lawyer.

Mr. MORSE. It was that interpretation of war powers upon which we acted during World War II. We were not reversed by any court; but, of course, that does not mean that at some time there may not be a reversal.

I shall close with one more question, because I make my point with it. I am strong for appeals. I am strong for checks. However, I want to point out that it is necessary to centralize appeals in a very few tribunals. If we provide a broad base for appeals, so that a court in Texas, a court in California, a court in Idaho, or a court in Maine can take jurisdiction over the same subject matter in principle, and by means of legal techniques, using an injunction here and an injunction there, prevent the application of a wage-board decision, for example, the tendency would be to bog down the effectiveness of whatever tribunal were set up in Washington to handle wages or other labor issues. If we are to have what would correspond to the old War Labor Board—and I understand under the bill the Board contemplated would have jurisdiction over both wages and prices—such a Board must be in a position where a quick review may be had of its decisions on a national level, and not on a local level.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York would like to interrupt the Senator from Oregon at this point, if he may, in order to point out that no specific Board is contemplated in the bill.

Mr. MORSE. It is not specified.

Mr. IVES. No; it is not specified. Permission is given along the line indicated, but is not specifically provided.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from New York would not be surprised, would he, if under the language of the bill the President, in the exercise of the discretion which is granted under the bill, would set up such a board?

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York very much favors such a set-up. The bill is sufficiently sound in connection with existing legislation, in that it ties itself in with existing statutes on labor relations.

Mr. MORSE. I close by mentioning an example of the point I wish to stress. Let us use the example of the War Labor Board during World War II, because I am familiar with the War Labor Board. If we had been subjected as a national board to appeals on a local or regional basis to every district court in the United States, the Board would have been unable to function. Although I think there should be checks upon the decisions of these administrative tribunals, I am very much of the opinion that checks by way of appeal review should be limited to certain specified courts, perhaps to one of the Federal courts set aside as an emergency court. Unless we have an emergency tribunal, such as the War Labor Board, whose decisions apply on a uniform basis across the country, it cannot be effective in its operation. We are dealing again with a matter of procedure which I think is vital to the successful operation of any of these tribunals in regard to the substantive issues that come before them.

Because I am not a member of the committee, I shall rely very heavily upon the analysis of the Senator from New York of the questions I am raising in this connection, and I shall talk to him regarding it off the floor over the week end, because I think it is very important we keep in mind the fact that we are moving and must move into a total economic mobilization. Therefore, we must have a procedure for handling the review of decisions necessarily to be issued under total mobilization which will not permit the procedure itself to defeat the purposes of the mobilization.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York thanks the Senator from Oregon and assures him that he will be very glad to confer with him at any time regarding the subject matter.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to commend most highly the able Senator from South Carolina and his distinguished committee for the extraordinarily good work they have done in the presentation of the pending measure to the Senate. There are many of us who believe we are already in the skirmish stage of the fiercest contest in our national existence; that we are engaged with a dastardly and sinister foe in a struggle which will not end and cannot end until those who have attacked us have learned the principles of decency and justice, or until they at long last succumb to the righteous retribution of the aroused civilized world and are stripped of the power to torture the world with war.

The only way we can possibly accomplish the herculean task before us is by mobilizing completely and totally the mighty power of this Nation. It is not a question of whether we are going to do something that is good or great; it is a question of whether we are going to be able to do enough to survive, for this is a battle which will determine the kind of a world which will live.

Mr. President, I commend the committee for the contribution it has made and is making toward eventual victory for the forces of decency and democracy in the world.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I feel certain the committee deeply appreciates the thoughts of the distinguished Senator from Florida.

As the Senate knows, the distinguished minority leader and the acting majority leader reached an agreement that we would try to bring this session of the Senate to an end at 3 o'clock so that the Sergeant at Arms could have his assistants move out the desks and belongings of Senators.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has a report he desires to file, and I should be only too glad to yield a few minutes to him, but I can yield only for a short time, because we have an agreement to take a recess because of the necessity of moving from this Chamber, since we are to meet in the old Supreme Court room on Monday. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations, and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to the act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow temporarily from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary, pending specific appropriations by the Congress, to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $500,000,000 outstanding at any one time. Intended to be proposed by Mr. Bricker to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, viz:

Strike all of section 708, commencing on line 7 of page 73, through line 3 on page 74, and substitute the following new section in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 708. (a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this Act.

"(b) No act or omission to act requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the provisions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States.

"(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall only be delegated upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this Act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

"(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request."

Strike all of section 712, commencing on line 20 of page 76 through line 2 on page 79.

Renumber sections 713, 714, 715, and 716 as necessary.

AN ACT

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Price and wage stabilization.
Title III. Authority to requisition.
Title IV. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title V. Control of credit and commodity speculation.
Title VI. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 103. It is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully to hoard any necessaries. The term "necessaries" as used in this section means foods; feeds; wearing apparel; automobile tires; containers primarily designed or intended for containing foods, feeds, or fertilizers; fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas; fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients; tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of the above-named articles and materials; and any other articles and materials the equitable distribution of which the President shall find, and shall by proclamation declare, to be essential to carry out the purposes of this Act. Necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this section when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time; (b) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time or reasonably required to furnish necessaries produced in surplus quantities seasonably throughout the period of scant or no production, or (c) withheld whether by possession or under any contract or arrangement from the market by any person for the purpose of unreasonably increasing or diminishing the price: Provided, That this section shall not apply to futures trading transactions on any commodity exchange or board of trade.

TITLE II—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 201. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 202. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders at the same time both

(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service; and

(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this Act, shall be issued whenever an increase in wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally.

Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.

(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. From time to time the President shall adjust ceilings, and in determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950: Provided, That no regulation or order shall contain any provision requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by such producer during the first thirty-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed; and no ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals (a) for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility;

(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

SEC. 203. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

SEC. 204. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 205. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 206. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 207. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this Act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 208. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

SEC. 209. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 205 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 205 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

sumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge, or overcharges, if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

SEC. 210. As used in this title—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but without limitation, vacation and holding payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

TITLE III—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 301. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) where the President finds that all other means of acquiring or obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE IV—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 401. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 403. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 404. (a) For the purposes of sections 402 and 403, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to Act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation.

Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE V—CONTROL OF CREDIT

Subtitle A—Consumer and Real Estate Credit

Sec. 501. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any consumer or real estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) Any rules, regulations, or orders for real estate credit shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans of like classifications authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any rule, regulation, or order otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans.

(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semi-durable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit, hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 602 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 502. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions

shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 602. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies, which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary, and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 604. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 605. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 606. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 607. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title I of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 608. (a) No act or omission to act pursuant to this Act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder and that if any objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President or such person as he may designate shall approve or disapprove the request.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

(d) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this Act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within ninety days after the approval of this Act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

SEC. 609. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 610. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 611. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 612. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 613. That no person may be employed under this Act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this Act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

SEC. 614. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1951, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

Passed the House of Representatives August 10, 1950.

Attest: RALPH R. ROBERTS,

Clerk.

Calendar No. 2271

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

AN ACT

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

AUGUST 11 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Read twice and ordered to be placed on the calendar

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with subsection (4) of rule XXIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italics, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

"CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

* * * * *

"Title XII—Security provisions

"Secretary of Commerce and Civil Aeronautics Board

"SEC. 1201. The purpose of this title is to establish security provisions which will encourage and permit the maximum use of civil aircraft consistent with the national security. Whenever the President determines such action to be required in the interest of national security, he may direct the Secretary of Commerce and the Civil Aeronautics Board to exercise the powers, duties, and responsibilities granted in this title to the extent, in the manner and for such periods of time as the President considers necessary.

"National security regulations

"SEC. 1202. The Board shall consider requirements of national security as well as safety of flight in air commerce, in exercising its powers and carrying out its responsibilities under title VI of this act.

"Security control of air traffic

"Sec. 1203. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to establish such zones or areas in the air space above the United States, its Territories and possessions (including areas of land or water administered by the United States under international agreement) as he may find necessary in the interests of national security; and may, after consultation with the Department of Defense and the Board, by rule, regulation, or order within such zones or areas, prohibit or restrict flights of aircraft which he cannot effectively identify, locate, and control with available facilities: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce shall consult with the Department of State before exercising the authority provided in this section with respect to areas of land or water administered by the United States under international agreement.

"Penalties

"Sec. 1204. In addition to the penalties otherwise provided for by this act, any person who knowingly or willfully violates any provision of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding one year, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

"Termination of title

"Sec. 1205. The provisions of this title shall expire on such date as may be specified by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress."

The Secretary of Commerce, the Civil Aeronautics Board, and the Department of the Air Force have all endorsed the enactment of this bill.

August 15 to October 1, 1950, to perform in my absence any and all duties required of or devolving upon the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate by law or by the rules of order of the Senate.

JOSEPH C. DUKE,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

MONTANA—ARTICLE BY A. B. GUTHRIE, JR.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to a very interesting article entitled "Montana," written by A. B. Guthrie, Jr., appearing in the magazine Holiday for September 1950.

The article dwells on the early pioneer life of Montana. It describes the settlements in those early days and tells some tall tales of the rugged miners and hard-riding, heavy-drinking cattlemen of that period. It brings to life again the early days of Butte, the great mining camp of the West made famous by the wars of the copper kings who created history in their desperate fight for control of the richest mineral zone ever discovered. It also tells of the early history of the cattlemen and the famous Alder Gulch mining camp which was the center of activities of the road agents and the vigilantes. It also describes the grandeur of the great mountains, forests, and scenic beauties of our State, with pictures in color showing Montana's magnificent scenery and recreational inducements which attract visitors from all over the world. I recommend it to my colleagues as an excellent piece of travel literature.

The article may not be entirely accurate in its portrayal of the heavy drinking and free spending that goes on in ranch towns, and perhaps it may not be entirely accurate in its inference that New Deal Senators are routed out of the State and sent on to the United States Senate just because they might be inimical to the best interests of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. and the Montana Power Co. if allowed to hang around the State. But, what is the difference? No one in Montana is going to complain about a few irrelevancies. A writer of an article like that is entitled to a certain amount of poetic license. It is an entertaining tale and a fine piece of publicity. I think it is worth a great amount of money to Montana in attracting tourists; so I am for it, lock, stock, and barrel.

Montana, of course, will always be famous as a tourist's paradise, and, no one would wish to see it lose its character as the Nation's most scenic and colorful State. Yet the people of Montana cannot thrive on scenery, agriculture, copper mining, and cattle raising alone. We must have a balanced economy. We must develop our great potential water-power resources and attract sufficient industries to our State to provide a balanced economy. We must have some development of our great natural resources if Montana is to play its part as the treasure State.

As a result of the great program of reclamation, hydroelectric power development, and rural electrification which we have been pursuing in recent years, a new period in Montana's history is beginning to dawn. New industries are seeking location in our State to take advantage of the low-cost electric power new being developed at the Hungry Horse Dam. Several important aluminum and chemical industries have already made arrangements to establish industrial plants which will be powered by our newly developed hydroelectric installations. Already the trend of declining population has been reserved and Montana is beginning to grow.

The holiday article is significant because it marks the passing of the old life of our State and the beginning of a new and brilliant future. To be sure, we will always cling to our memories of the pioneer days that have gone; but for all the years to come Montana will continue to be a tourist's paradise. But along with our scenic attractions and delightful recreational facilities, we will have improved business and industrial opportunities, bringing new population, growth, and prosperity to our State.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business before the Senate is consideration of Senate bill 3936, a bill to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment. As the Chair announced last week, the substitute language reported by the committee will be regarded as the text of the bill for purposes of amendment. No amendment is pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. As many as favor it will say "aye."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is this the price-control bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the control bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well—wages, prices, allocations, priorities, general provisions, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is Senate bill 3936.

Mr. WHERRY. There are about 30 amendments to be offered. I wonder if the managers in charge of the bill are ready to proceed with the committee amendments? There is no objection on my part to that being done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] has some amendments to propose as committee amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, the amendments the Senator from South Carolina will offer are amendments to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. And the intention is to complete action on those first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is true.

THE OLD SUPREME COURT CHAMBER

The VICE PRESIDENT. While we are waiting for the Senator from South Carolina it occurs to the Chair that he might, with the consent of the Senate, make reference to the fact that the Senate of the United States moved out of this Chamber into the new Senate Chamber in 1859, 91 years ago. The desks that are in the Senate Chamber were put in it then. The fixtures around the rostrum were put in the Chamber at that time, and have been in use since that time.

The Vice President of the United States at that time was John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky. He was the Vice President when the Senate moved out of this Chamber into the new Chamber. While I, of course, do not claim in any respect to be his equal, at least I am from Kentucky, and was Vice President when we moved back into this Chamber, and hope to continue to be when we shall move back into the new Chamber after it has been reconstructed.

That has nothing to do with the pending bill, but it is an interesting historical fact.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I should like to make a few observations on the pending bill before we proceed to consider the amendments.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRICKER. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have three short amendments I wish to offer to the committee amendment. I have spoken to various Senators about the three amendments. They are not amendments of the kind the Senator from Ohio has. I wonder if the Senator from Ohio would object if I should call up my amendments at this time.

Mr. BRICKER. I am not going to speak on the amendments.

Mr. MAYBANK. My purpose was to ask unanimous consent that those three amendments be considered first.

Mr. BRICKER. May they not be considered after I have finished? Is there any reason why they should be considered now?

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, action on them can wait until the Senator has concluded.

Mr. BRICKER. I shall take only a few minutes; not more than 20 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had previously announced that the amendments offered by the chairman of the committee would be regarded as committee amendments.

Mr. BRICKER. As I understand, the amendments in question will be offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amended bill of the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. I have discussed the amendments with some of the members of the committee. I did not have the opportunity to discuss them with the Senator from Ohio last Friday.

Mr. BRICKER. I do not know what they are. My remarks, however, do not go to the amendments, either to my own or to those of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from South Carolina intends to offer at this time the amendment providing for processing of meat?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the main amendment. I spoke to the Senator from Nebraska about it. Is it agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska that it be offered at this time?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, it seems to me, Mr. President, that as we resume consideration of the bill, which is of vital importance, which is all-encompassing of the economy of the country, providing as it does for control of business and the individual citizen in his daily activities and daily life, we ought to try to get down to the fundamentals and consider the real problems we have before us not only domestically, but world-wide as well.

Russia has a three-pronged method of attack. The first is by a process of infiltration, at which she has been very successful around the world, and even in this country. The second is by the use of armed force of her satellites here, there, and yonder, to gain additional territory and additional influence. In that field she has been very successful. There might be added to that ultimately a direct movement of the Russian arms themselves.

Finally, as we are all very conscious of the fact, the third prong of her offensive is to break the economies of the capitalist nations of the world, and essentially that of the United States.

In the consideration of this bill I think we should never lose sight of the fact that that is one of the important phases of the Russian world-wide movement today, for she has felt that the American economy might break at this time, that there might be a depression, wherein she could further sow the seeds of dissension and perhaps bring about a revolution in this country. That did not happen, and no doubt at the present time those in control of the destinies of that terribly destructive movement are considering what will happen to the economy of the United States. We likewise should give adequate consideration to it, Mr. President.

The committee was very diligent in its consideration of this bill. I feel a sense of deep gratitude for the individual efforts of all the members of the committee, and I wish to pay especial respect to the chairman of the committee, who has been most diligent in this entire program, sitting almost constantly, mornings and afternoons, and at times late into the evenings, in trying to prepare a bill which might be presentable to the Senate and acceptable to the country and constructive in its influence.

Titles I, II, III, VI, and VII of Senate bill 3936 relate to and comprise the economic controls requested by the President in his message of July 19, 1950. The President requested quick action on the powers contained in these titles. The committee promptly held hearings and made many improving amendments to the bill as originally introduced; and committee action on the powers requested by the President was substantially completed by August 2, 1950—now some 2 weeks ago. It is clear that the controls provided by titles I, II, III, VI, and VII are necessary in the judgment of the committee, in waging the Korean war and in being better prepared for some similar or greater emergency in the future. Moreover, those powers are needed very soon, if not already, it seems to me, if they are to be effective. They could have been enacted into law almost immediately, if titles IV and V, the price-control and wage-control amendments, had not been inserted into the original bill. The controversy around those titles of the bill have been extensive in the committee, and no doubt will be extensive on the floor of the Senate.

The President has not requested price, wage, and consumer rationing controls at all. The fact that the committee has provided these controls on a stand-by basis indicates that, in the committee's judgment, they are not needed now. The President asked that price-wage-rationing controls be deferred if action on such controls would prolong consideration or delay action in either House. Certainly the inclusion of such provisions has prolonged consideration of the bill, and will continue to do so. Because consideration of price and wage controls even yet threatens to delay materially the enactment of legislation which is vital to national defense, titles IV and V should be recommitted for further and adequate consideration by the committee.

Price and wage controls as a part of a major, whole program would hamper the President in putting into effect the presently needed powers granted by this bill. That would be because of the pressures brought from every section of the country and every segment of our society for immediate action on price and wage and rationing controls. If prices of commodities were to go up immediately, there would be tremendous pressure upon the President, as no doubt there would be if this entire bill were enacted, to fix the prices of commodities and then to fix wages. All of it is built on a house of cards, our economic structure is very complex, and our economic system is an integrated one. In my judgment, such selective controls are impossible of administration and destructive to our economy as a whole.

There are other reasons why titles IV and V should not be enacted as a part of S. 3936. Hearings on price and wage stabilization policies have not been held. The committee has not had time or evidence sufficient to permit it to evaluate the Nation's experience under World War II price and wage control laws, even from the viewpoint of those who administered it. At a result, many of the mistakes, hardships, and injustices experienced during the last war will be repeated or perpetuated merely for lack of adequate consideration.

Unquestionably, much of the demand for immediate price and wage control legislation was inspired by the testimony of Mr. Bernard M. Baruch. However titles IV and V of S. 3936 are entirely inconsistent with the so-called Baruch plan in many fundamental ways.

Mr. Baruch urged the adoption of price and wage controls "across-the-board." Section 402 (b) of the bill authorizes the President to try selective price and wage controls before resorting to general controls. Mr. Baruch's thesis, confirmed by the experience in two world wars, is that any attempt to control a few prices or wages is futile. The American economy is so interdependent and specialized that a piecemeal approach is bound to create inequities faster than they can possibly be corrected by regulations or rules or edicts from the President. As a result, materials and labor would tend to move from the controlled industry to the uncontrolled segment of the economy, thus causing a result exactly contrary to that sought to be attained. Since the controlled industry will undoubtedly be vital to the national defense, selective controls must inevitably expand. The greatest danger in the idea of selective price and wage controls is that the President will be subjected to tremendous pressure to control particular commodities, the price of which people, rightly or wrongly, feel to be excessive. Having initiated a piecemeal system of controls, the President would be powerless to stop general price and wage controls, even if he should feel they were premature.

Another feature of the price and wage control titles would be the tremendous number of employees necessary, who might very well—and, in my judgment, might better—be used in a constructive production effort toward the consummation of the program or the rebuilding of our military machine and in respect to winning the affair in Korea. Enactment of the price-control and wage-control titles would entail black markets and shortages here, there, and yonder, with the thousands of employees necessary to deal with them and with the unlimited number of court cases which would ultimately be brought, confusing the entire economy and tying up the business processes of the country generally.

Another fundamental point in the Baruch plan is that controls over prices and wages must be tied together and exercised together within a single agency. S. 3936 does not accomplish this purpose. Although prices and wages must be simultaneously controlled, subject to certain broad and vague exceptions, under sections 402 (b) and (c), the bill permits the President to use one period for the purpose of fixing price ceilings, and an entirely different period for the purpose of stabilizing wages. Under section 402 (d), the President could roll back prices to their June 1949 levels and stabilize wages at the current or some future level. If time had permitted hearings and careful study of title IV, it is unlikely that the committee would have given the President power to destroy the existing price-wage relationships in every American business.

The committee attempted in section 403 to follow Mr. Baruch's suggestion that controls over prices, wages, and rationing at the consumer level be administered through a single independent agency. But that purpose is largely nullified by the language of title V. Section 502 authorizes the President "to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting the national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate."

The authority to control prices, wages, and distribution of consumer goods at the retail level vests in the President more arbitrary power over the lives of the American people than any other legislation past or present. If it is necessary for the President to have such power, Congress should not evade its responsibility for saying when such powers are necessary. The granting of such power on a stand-by basis requires the inclusion of provisions for a degree of flexibility which greatly increases the threat to individual liberty. For example, the vague language of title V would apparently enable the President to settle a labor dispute by drafting striking workers. The very inclusion of these provisions in the bill in regard to price, wage, and rationing controls is in itself an inducement to the very thing that they are intended to prevent. If there are stand-by controls given, immediately there will be a rush for increased wages and another cycle of increased wages, and there will be an effort on the part of everyone to get his prices up to the highest possible level, so that if they are ultimately fixed, he may hope to get the advantage of that increase. There will be scare buying, as there has been—now unjustified, but then possibly more justified than today.

If there is a strong probability that total war in the near future is inevitable, the Baruch plan for all-out mobilization is sound. However, if the Nation's defense effort for the foreseeable future does not require more than $15,000,000,000, price-wage-rationing controls would not only be unnecessary but would impair our ability to wage total war.

All available evidence seems to point to the conclusion that total economic mobilization is not necessary to handle the cost of the Korean war or any similar emergency. Supplies of agricultural commodities are plentiful. It is absurd to consider rationing at a time when the Government itself is restricting acreage and buying farm products to hold up prices.

There have been some substantial price increases in recent weeks. Most of these increases, however, seem to be due to scare-buying in anticipation of future shortages. It seems most improbable, however, that these shortages will materialize if the President and the Congress adopt anti-inflationary measures. Already the President has cut back the public housing program and the Government's housing loan programs, and that has been constructive, and it will be effective. Extensive powers over consumer credit and private credit for real estate construction are contained in title IV. Congress has taken some steps toward reducing nonessential Federal expenditures and more ought to be taken. Proposals to finance the Korean war on a pay-as-you-go basis are receiving widespread support. If all these anti-inflationary policies are vigorously pursued, the extra $15,000,000,000, $20,000,000,000, or $25,000,000,000 of defense spending will have a negligible impact on prices.

A possible shortage of steel has been mentioned more often than any other. It is entirely possible, however, that priorities and allocations for steel can be worked out on a voluntary basis, and the Secretary of Commerce so testified before the committee. At the present time the military program consumes only about 1½ percent of total output. The President's military program will require only 5 percent of the steel supply, about 5,000,000,000 tons annually. The steel required in the expanded military program as of today can be completely satisfied out of additional capacity already planned by the industry. The automobile industry alone consumed 11,000,000 tons of steel last year. It seems possible, therefore, to satisfy the military demand simply by using tight credit controls to curtail the buying of automobiles, refrigerators, and other durable goods.

Aluminum is another material in which shortgages may occur. Military purchases are expected to increase from 2½ to 12 percent of total supply. This increase, however, is much less than the increased production already planned by the industry.

The greatest protection we have against inflation is the tremendous capacity of American industry to produce and the greatest assurance for victory in war is our capacity for production in America. I do not have very serious concern about the ability of American industry to produce the implements of war. My concern today is in regard to manpower, a problem brought forcibly to our attention by the present situation in Korea. I do not want to see our productive capacity hampered or hurt; I do not want to see it unduly regimented, so that it might not be able to respond in full power and force when a crisis of worldwide magnitude might face America. The American people have always depended on a free-enterprise economy for the industrial strength needed in any possible emergency. So far a free economy has made this Nation better prepared for war than the totalitarian governments which have relied on planned or regimented economies. That is our best assurance of strength tomorrow. It would be a tragedy to stifle American industry, labor, and consumers with a maze of controls over prices, wages, and rationing which cannot be administered fairly or efficiently even with the cooperation which prevails during total war. It is much less possible to enforce them in time of peace. To apply such controls prematurely without careful study, or for the purpose of obtaining some political advantage, is a senseless gamble with the security of the Nation at stake.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I have been reading the amendments to be offered by the Senator from Ohio, with particuular reference to his amendment A, which carries a prohibition against conscripting strikers into the armed services, as I understand, along with one or two other prohibitions. Where does the Senator get the interpretation that the words "and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes" give the President authority to draft strikers into the Army?

Mr. BRICKER. The language of the section is unlimited in giving the President power to do anything in regard to labor disputes. There is some qualifying language in the bill in relation to other laws of the country. If that be true, there is no power needed that the President does not now have on the statute books, unless it involves compulsory arbitration, raising of wages, and so forth, something which I know Congress does not want to do.

Mr. AIKEN. Did the President request this authority?

Mr. BRICKER. He did not. It is in the original bill which was submitted, but there was nothing in the President's request which had anything to do with it at all. I think the chairman of the committee will confirm that statement.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate, the substitute bill which the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has reported for the original bill, Senate bill 3936, is now open to any germane amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whether amendments are germane or not, under the rules of the Senate the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I realize that a broad interpretation of the Senate rules might permit amendments which are not germane. I was trying to throw out a little hint of what I hoped would be the character of amendments to be offered. At some time today some suggestion may be made that we try to fix a time to vote. I think, Mr. President, that instead of doing that, we can expedite the proper consideration of this measure if Senators who have had amendments printed which they wish to call up will proceed today to call their amendments up and let the debate occur on those specific points as we go along, and not fix a time that may be Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, when we are to take up the bill and all amendments and proceed to vote.

That would be an invitation, Mr. President, for Members of this distinguished body to devote their attention to other things until the time comes to vote. Then, when that time comes, it will be found that the membership present has not had an opportunity to be fully informed as to the amendments on which the Senate is to vote, and those who propose amendments do not have an adequate time in which to present them, and thus, of necessity, we shall have to limit the proponents and opponents of amendments to 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. There is this consideration, however, about voting on amendments today or tomorrow. If I offer an amendment and argue it, I shall be lucky if there are 12 Senators present. When a quorum is called, the other Senators do not know anything about the amendment; they have not heard what has been discussed, and they do not know at the moment what they are voting on, and will vote almost completely blindly or without having given the amendment consideration. While I agree with the Senator that it is best not to call up all the amendments and vote on them on one day, I see no objection to presenting amendments. I have presented my amendments and the reasons for them. I should like to have Members have an opportunity to know what goes on in the RECORD. We shall hold a Republican conference tomorrow morning at which we intend to discuss generally different types of amendments.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The distinguished Senator from Ohio has touched on a problem for which there is no present answer, namely, how can we keep the full membership on the floor when an important bill and amendments are being discussed? The only suggestion the Senator from Virginia can offer on that point is that those who discuss the bill be concise in their discussion of it and limit themselves to germane issues, and then possibly more Senators will be willing to take time from other duties, because they might receive some information that may illuminate their understanding.

The Senator from Ohio has mentioned the fact that possibly there will not be more than 12 Members of the Senate on the floor. He is well aware of the fact that when he delivered a very brilliant speech on this subject last Friday there were not 12 Members present to hear him.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And when the the Senator from Virginia followed him, there were still fewer Members present to hear him. When three of us had spoken on Friday, no one else cared to speak, and the Senate recessed at approximately 3 o'clock p. m., although the bill is a matter of vital importance as to which time is of the essence. When debate was opened on Thursday there were only a handful of Senator on the floor. There were only two or three who were ready, able, and willing to speak, and a recess was taken early on that day.

What boots it for us to put off to some future day, this week or next week, the vote on this question, when either Senators are already so well informed about the points involved that they do not want any further information, or else they think there are other duties pressing upon them which are of greater importance? Throughout this session I have observed that when we fixed a day for a vote on an important bill with numerous amendments, nothing of any value was done during the interim. We should like to get away at some reasonable time next month. I am not up for reelection; I do not have to go home to campaign; but there are some things I should like to do. I do not have to discuss them in detail. But I should like to finish up the three important things which are now before us, namely, the conference report on the tax bill, this bill, and the conference report on the social security bill. We should then take a recess to permit our colleagues who want to do a little campaigning to go home for that purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator has answered his own question. It is because of conferences and the work being done by Senate committees that it is difficult to keep Senators on the floor. Inasmuch as the point was raised with reference to a unanimous-consent agreement, I rose to inform the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], who was the acting majority leader on Friday, that I would do my level best to canvass the situation and see when and if we might arrive at a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the bill some day this week. I should like to say for the RECORD that I feel that inasmuch as a conference has been called for tomorrow on the minority side, if the Senator from South Carolina would withhold asking unanimous consent until after the matter has been discussed in that conference, I could give him a very definite answer. I think I should rather wait until that time.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the minority leader and I discussed the matter at some length on Friday. I talked with him again this morning, and he told me there would be a Republican conference tomorrow, and he believed that after that we might reach some agreement to vote within a reasonable time. I know the Senator from Nebraska feels, as I do, that the matter is urgent.

Mr. WHERRY. I am in complete accord with the Senator from Virginia, that in the absence of a unanimous-consent agreement the Senate should proceed with the consideration of the bill. I understood the Senator would offer his amendments to the committee bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I intended to do. I intended to call up amendments as to which I do not think there is any very controversial issue involved.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I wish to conclude by saying that I am very glad to hear the chairman of the committee say that he proposes to bring up some committee amendments which perhaps will not be highly controversial, and that we can act on them. If some other Member has an amendment and no Senator wishes to make a long speech on some other question, we can have a quorum call, and when Senators arrive it can be announced that we are going to consider amendment number so-and-so, and then we can vote on it.

In mentioning the things that I wanted to have completed, I perhaps overlooked the conference report on the appropriation bill. I thought I had mentioned the conference report on the appropriation bill, which is, of course, important. If I did not mention it, I mention it now.

Personally I should like to have time before adjournment to act on some appropriate measure to meet the threat of communism in our own country. To me that is a very serious matter. I merely want to know how best to do it. I have not had a full opportunity to study the Mundt-Ferguson bill. Furthermore, I understand that we have had on our calendar for more than a year a bill to increase the powers of the Central Intelligence Agency. I do not know why we cannot act on that bill. We should consider such measures. We need the cooperation of Members of this distinguished body on the pending bill. Otherwise one of two things will happen. Either we shall not have an opportunity to act on measures on which we should take action before we recess prior to the November election, or we shall take hasty action on measures that should be carefully and properly considered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to strike out "fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable" and insert in lieu thereof "agricultural commodity"; on page 45, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out "fresh fruit or fresh vegetables" and insert in lieu thereof "agricultural commodity."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the committee is more or less in agreement on the proposed amendment. Its effect would be to substitute the words "agricultural commodity" for "fresh fruit and any fresh vegetable." We thought it wise to make this substitution so as to cover a disastrous condition caused, for example, by climatic conditions with respect to other commodities than only fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a question.

Mr. MAYBANK. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. To what does the section refer? I read:

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity * * * Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable——

Mr. MAYBANK. We propose to strike that out and substitute "agricultural commodity."

Mr. TAFT. My question is, what does it do? I read further from the section:

The President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowance for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields——

Mr. MAYBANK. Due to some disaster, for example.

Mr. TAFT. I read further:

unusual increases in costs of production.

Why not "usual"? Why not any increase?

Mr. MAYBANK. Speaking for myself, I may say to the Senator that I would be perfectly willing to eliminate the word "unusual." The intent of the committee was to avoid possible confusion. It was felt that commodities other than fresh fruits and vegetables may meet with disaster next fall. Of course this bill is designed as stand-by legislation. No one can foresee what will happen in the future. Therefore we thought we should make the section apply to all agricultural products instead of merely to fresh fruits and vegetables, such as the orange crop, for example.

Mr. TAFT. Do I understand the amendment proposes a special power or instruction to adjust the ceiling?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Is there not a general power in the law to adjust the price of any commodity which has been fixed?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. What is the purpose of this particular sentence? It seems to me that it protects not only agricultural products. It speaks of unusual increases in cost of production.

Mr. MAYBANK. The old law did not refer to agricultural products. The provision adopted by the Senate during the last war, if the Senator remembers, was made because of disasters which happened to fruit crops. I do not remember all the fruit crops. We thought it would be well to have the section cover any disaster to any agricultural product, instead of having it apply only to fresh fruits and vegetables. The President has the power to adjust the ceiling with respect to all agricultural products. It would apply, in other words, to corn. If the corn borer were to destroy the corn crop, or if we had a short crop of corn, as we did in 1944 and 1945—I do not remember the exact year—the section would apply to corn as well. We thought the words "agricultural commodity" would be a better term to use than "any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable."

Mr. TAFT. I am interested in whether the adjustment could be made on any products. This section does not propose an absolute freeze in prices on any industrial commodities?

Mr. MAYBANK. No, sir.

Mr. TAFT. I do not quite understand why the particular provision of adjustment should apply only to agricultural commodities.

Mr. MAYBANK. There was such a provision in the last OPA law. The Senate adopted a similar provision, which advised the Administrator what to do in such cases. It is impossible to foresee what may happen in the future. We hope it will not be necessary to roll back prices, or anything like that; but we thought we would make the section apply to all farm crops by using the term "agricultural commodity." In the event of a disaster, agricultural products, such as wheat, corn, or cotton, for example, would be included in the provision of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I see no reference to any disaster in the section.

Mr. MAYBANK. I said disaster. I mean any hardship as a result of large crop loss, for example. There has been a tremendous loss in the peach crop this year because of the freeze last spring. It could be corn or wheat next year. We thought we would include all agricultural commodities, particularly because the bill is in the nature of stand-by legislation.

Mr. TAFT. I do not understand the necessity, because at page 43 the bill provides:

In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials, services, and property, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material, service, or profit, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or deceases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or property.

I do not see why the adjustments could not be made on fresh fruits and vegetables under that section. I have no objection to the amendment except that——

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate the Senator's saying that. We wanted to make certain that we did not make the mistake we made last time, when certain crops were impaired, injured, or whatever term one cares to use.

Mr. TAFT. My recollection is, if I remember the facts, such a provision was not written into the last law.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. We inserted a general clause, and under the general clause Congress felt adjustments could have been made with respect to fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes, but that was not done.

Mr. TAFT. This amendment would force the Administrator to do something which he could do anyway.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. If I remember correctly, former Senator Stewart introduced an amendment with respect to that matter.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I believe so. This situation again illustrates the complications we encounter in trying to make special arrangements with respect to fruits and vegetables, because most of these provisions probably would apply to industrial commodities anyway. However, I have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words, what the Senator from South Carolina is attempting to do is to extend the adjustment to all agricultural products, inasmuch as by this special provision such authority would be granted only to fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mr. MAYBANK. It would apply to all agricultural products.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. MAYBANK. We gave special treatment to fruits and vegetables the last time. We want to be fair in the treatment of cotton, corn, peanuts, and other agricultural products and that is the idea of the Farm Bureau and the Grange.

Mr. WHERRY. At page 43, as was pointed out, provision is made to adjust ceilings generally.

Mr. MAYBANK. That was not always done heretofore, however.

Mr. WHERRY. The fact that fresh fruits and vegetables are covered makes it necessary that it apply as well to all agricultural products.

Mr. MAYBANK. All agricultural products; yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Otherwise, it could be considered as an isolated situation. The amendment makes it apply to all agricultural products. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated. It is known as the Barkley-Bates amendment, which the distinguished Vice President offered when he served as a Senator. I discussed it with him at some length and with the distinguished minority leader who is familiar with the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(h) No ceilings shall be established or maintained on products resulting from the processing of cattle and calves, lambs and sheep, and hogs, the processing of each species being separately considered, which do not allow for a reasonable margin of profit to the processing industry as a group on each such species.

Mr. MAYBANK obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it was last Thursday, when the bill was first taken up for debate, that the Senator from South Carolina and the junior Senator from Nebraska engaged in a rather extensive colloquy about this amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I am in absolute sympathy with what is being attempted by the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment. I think it is an improvement on the McKellar provision which it amends. But in order to clarify the amendment, because of the difficulties which were experienced even under this amendment, I should like to ask a few questions.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from South Carolina define the processing industry as including wholesalers of meat? That is a very reasonable question, because if they are not included, we will run into all kinds of trouble, such as was met by the Small Business Committee in attempting to establish the levels of profit for the processing industry by groups. I believe that in practice we should include wholesalers.

Mr. MAYBANK. I believe wholesalers should be included, the same as processors. In the meat industry the wholesaler is usually a processor.

Mr. WHERRY. If he is included, that is all I am asking. If he is included as a part of the processing industry, the Senator has answered my question.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Would that apply to the processors of products who do their own wholesaling? How would it apply to a wholesaler who depended on purchases from the processor? Why is this confined to the packing industry only? What about the processors of fruits and vegetables?

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall look at the report.

Mr. WHERRY. I have read the report, and I am quite satisfied that the report is silent on the question asked by the Senator from Vermont. The attempt of the amendment, of course, is to insure a proper level of profit in the processing industry, and I suppose that if a formula were written on page 77 assuring those who handle meat at the different levels that they would get their quotas from prior years, then there would not be any difficulty, and the bill would come more nearly accomplishing the purpose sought, namely, to eliminate black-market operators. If any segments is squeezed out of normal distribution immediately that segment seeks to get a new source of supply, and the purpose of the act might be defeated. In other words, the meat must be distributed through the ordinary channels.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, we did not have any hearing on this amendment, as the Senator knows, but we went back to the price-control laws and regulations in force in 1946. We did not discuss the matter in the committee, but it was the belief of the legislative counsel, and certainly of the chairman of the committee, that we should follow the definitions found in the price-control law of 1946. I cannot speak for the committee on this matter, because it has not come before the committee, but it would be my judgment, in view of the fact that the committee desired to keep out the black-market operators, that the wholesalers should be included.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment. I did not have time to consult the chairman of the committee about it.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is much more familiar with the packing industry than I am. Does he recall how this provision was interpreted before?

Mr. WHERRY. In view of our previous experience, I am going to offer an amendment to the amendment, because if I can help clarify the language and make it better, I am sure the Senator from South Carolina would agree. Before I answer his question, I desire to offer an amendment on line 5 of the amendment, after the words "profit to," to add three words, "each segment of," so that the amendment would read, "for a reasonable margin of profit to each segment of the processing industry as a group," and so forth. I am sure that would result in what the Senator from South Carolina desires to accomplish, and prevent any segment of this industry from being crowded out.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. I shall be glad to take the amendment to conference, as chairman of the committee, but I should like to discuss it with the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not believe there was much discussion of it.

Mr. MAYBANK. As chairman of the committee, I would not hesitate to accept the Senator's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the amendment just offered which would be, at the end of the amendment to insert this language:

> But no ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable margin of profit to the retailer, wholesaler, or manufacturer.

That takes in everything.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not at this time interested in discussing the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, who has a perfect right to offer the amendment after the pending amendment has been perfected.

Mr. CAPEHART. I beg the Senator's pardon; my amendment would be an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. It would be an amendment to the amendment as amended.

Mr. CAPEHART. It would have to be voted upon before the Senator's amendment was voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Under the parliamentary situation, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would first be acted on.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe there will be no objection to it. All my amendment does is to clarify what heretofore we had so much trouble about in the meat industry. Who is a processor? Who is entitled to a profit? I am satisfied that if the wholesaler is protected as a processor that is enough. The distinguished chairman has said that so far as he is concerned he interprets the language to include the wholesaler, but he is not speaking for the entire committee.

What is much more important, in my opinion, is that the words "each segment of" must be included, and I will give the reasons why. An integrated meat packer might lose money on one branch of his operations, but he could make money on all of his operations taken as a whole; that is, the profit would exceed the loss. In such a case there is no basis upon which to compare a profit for those who deal in only one segment of the entire industry. I am satisfied the distinguished Senator from South Carolina knows what I am seeking.

All the amendment does is to clarify the definition of the processing industry by providing that each segment of the processing industry, whether integrated or nonintegrated, is to be protected as a group.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment the able Senator from Nebraska is discussing, but I call attention to the fact that the same situation he pictures exists in every line of effort in the United States. The same situation exists with every retailer, every wholesaler, every manufacturer that faces the meat processors or manufacturers. Therefore, I think the amendment should be as fair to one as to the other. I am in favor of what the Senator wants to do, but I want to cover every segment of industry because the same principle applies to all. The retailer of any article might well be losing money on one item and making money on another. A manufacturer might well have a hundred items and be selling 50 at a loss and making a profit on only 50.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. As I stated a moment ago I am not objecting to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. That is offered to the amendment, as modified, which modification runs only to the meat industry itself. I am not discussing at this time the merits of that amendment at all. Certainly the Senator can present arguments which are extremely favorable to his amendment, because if we are going to take action with respect to the meat industry certainly similar action ought to be extended to all levels of distribution.

Coming back to the modification I propose, it is a very simple modification. If adopted, it will result in eliminating much dispute such as took place during the years 1945 and 1946. If the price to the retailer compared to the price to the wholesaler or the slaughterer does not allow for a level within which the independent producer can work and in which the integrated plant can operate, we will have trouble similar to the troubles we had in the years 1945 and 1946. If my amendment is added it will provide a clear definition of what the committee means by its amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. In view of the confusion resulting from the hearings held by the Small Business Committee and the Banking and Currency Committee in the years 1943, 1944, and 1945, it became necessary for then Senator BARKLEY and Representative Bates to present a clarifying amendment. I, as an individual Senator—not speaking for the committee—thought it would be good to have a similar amendment adopted now. The Senator from Indiana said it should apply to everything. No such provision was made during the last emergency. I hope we shall not again have a similar emergency. But I cannot accept the proposal of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WHERRY. The amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from Indiana is an amendment to the committee amendment, as proposed to be modified by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska as a modification to the committee amendment, can be acted upon, and then the amendment of the Senator from Indiana can be considered.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wish to answer the able Senator from South Carolina. Whether we did or did not in World War II enact such an amendment into law, it is only right and just that we write language into the bill providing that any ceiling price which may be fixed must show a reasonable profit to the person dealing in the product, whether he be a retailer, a wholesaler, a manufacturer, or a processor. I do not understand how anyone can object to that philosophy. It seems to me to be perfectly sound. It seems to me to be the very thing that anyone studying ceiling prices would try to bring about.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, the Senator has the right to present the amendment he has suggested when it is in order to do so. It was my hope, however, that the Senator could offer his amendment to some other section of the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Can the Senator tell me where I can offer my amendment to some other portion of the bill than that we are now considering? This seems to me to be the logical place to offer my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. After the section has been amended, as now proposed, the Senator can offer his amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. I shall state my reason for offering the amendment. If a situation exists in the meat business necessitating insertion of the meat amendment, a similar situation certainly exists in every other business, for example, in the canning business, or in any sort of manufacturing or retailing or wholesaling.

Mr. MAYBANK. Last year the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was a member of the Small Business Committee and I was a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. We have discussed such matters before. I understand from the Senator from Nebraska that the meat business occupies a special position. It is my hope that the amendment can be limited to the meat industry.

Mr. CAPEHART. I want it understood, Mr. President, that I am 100 percent in favor of the amendment to take care of the meat-processing industry, but I am likewise just as much interested in taking care of the canning industry, the retailing of any other line of merchandise, or the wholesaling or manufacturing of any other line of merchandise as I am in favor of taking care of the meat industry. How can anyone successfully contend that if a ceiling is placed on a price, a reasonable profit should not be afforded to the person dealing in the product?

Mr. MAYBANK. What is reasonable in connection with the canning of beef may not be reasonable in connection with the canning of peaches or pears.

Mr. CAPEHART. My proposal is just as workable with respect to canning of fruits and vegetables as it is with respect to processing of meats. We are talking now about a principle. We are proposing to direct the President that, when fixing ceiling prices, he shall fix them so they will provide a reasonable profit to anyone dealing in any specific merchandise on which the President fixes the ceiling, whether it be automobiles, pork chops, shoes, lead pensils, or any other commodity. How can anyone object to that?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, at the end of the paragraph is the following language——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Inasmuch as the distinguished Senator from Indiana asked the Senator from South Carolina a question, I continue to yield to him to answer. Then I shall yield to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. MAYBANK. I read from page 43, lines 16 through 21, as follows:

> Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

That is as far as the committee went.

Mr. WHERRY. I now yield to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Am I correct in understanding the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska as meaning that the language providing for a reasonable profit for processors of meat shall be extended to wholesalers and retailers?

Mr. WHERRY. It would not be extended to retailers at all. All in the world the Senator from Nebraska is doing is trying to clarify the language in line 5, so the level of profit with respect to processing will be extended to each segment of the meat industry, regardless of what particular stage of processing it may be.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska realizes that the amendment as offered is similar to that which was finally put into the OPA legislation during the last war?

Mr. WHERRY. I am very familiar with that.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Such an amendment was adopted during the last war. However, the representative of the drafting service tells me that he does not know what the language offered by the Senator from Nebraska would mean; whether it would include a wholesaler or retailer or what segment of the business. When we speak of each segment, we must realize that there are segments all the way from the farm level up, or down, as one may be pleased to call it, to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. WHERRY. If that is what the interpretation is, it is satisfactory to me. I think that is exactly what the interpretation ought to be. I think there ought to be a legitimate amount of profit from the retail level down to the producer. I wish to have the producer included. But I am not arguing about the producer now. In 1945 and 1946 it was very difficult to operate under the law, and it was then that different segments of the industry asked that their percentage of profit be maintained under the law. So at this time I am asking that we define the processing industry to include each segment thereof.

If we do not do so the integrated processor will come in on a showing of what business he does, from killing cattle, sheep and hogs, and processing some of the meat into, let us say, liverwurst, and byproducts such as fertilizer, hides and leather, ask that a profit be accorded to him on the basis of his integrated operation. We cannot compare the profit which goes to the large operator in the industry to that which goes to the little independent processor or slaughterer, who operates in an entirely different category, who might kill only sheep, for example, or who might kill only hogs, for example. There are thousands of small independent slaughterers who slaughter only hogs. I want the profit to extend by groups to the little independent as well as to the integrated business. The amendment clarifies the situation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I agree with what the Senator now says he is trying to do, but, in my opinion, as the language we are proposing was construed in the last war, it applies strictly to the processing business. The Senator's amendment could very easily be construed to mean that a wholesaler who is a segment in distributing processed meat, and a retailer who is a segment in distributing processed meat, are likewise included. If that is the meaning of the Senator's amendment, it goes beyond what we did during the war, and we meet the objection of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] who very properly says, "If you are going to give the wholesaler and the retailer of meat a reasonable profit, why do you not give it to everyone else?" In that event it will be necessary to rewrite the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the fact is that no hearings at all were held on the amendment.

My second point is that the Special Committee on Small Business—and, Mr. President, believe me, the distinguished Senator from Alabama will have plenty of discrimination brought to his attention if we operate under this law as we did the last time——

Mr. ROBERTSON. But will not the Senator——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to wait a minute, please; I have the floor. I shall be glad to yield when I conclude this observation.

My point is that it is a question of who is a processor. The distinguished Senator from Virginia said the provision would be interpreted to include retail dealers in meat. However, there is no evidence in the hearings or in respect to the former regulations that that interpretation ever was applied to the Barkley-Bates amendment.

The particular clarification to be made by the amendment which I have proposed would not be made in favor of or in behalf of the retailers at all. There may be some retailers who are processors. If there are, then they would be classified as a segment of the processing industry, as they rightly should be in such case.

This amendment is offered because I do not want prices established on meat and have a ceiling placed upon the producer, and crowd out the other segments of the meat industry. Neither does the Senator from Virginia want that to happen. That is all the amendment does.

The amendment would "allow a reasonable margin of profit—and those words are old ones, so far as this measure or similar measures are concerned—"to each segment of the processing industry."

What is meant by that? Does it mean five or six integrated processors or does it mean the entire processing industry?

I am asking that this portion of the bill be clarified by stating that the profit be based on a comparable percentage as between each segment of the processing industry within that group.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The language of the law during the last war was interpreted not to include the retailers or the wholesalers.

If the Senator from Nebraska will point out where that interpretation was wrong during the last war, we shall be glad to consider it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the Senator from Virginia sure that in the last war it was not interpreted to include the wholesalers?

Mr. ROBERTSON. If it was not, I have not heard of it. If it is that way now, it is not different from what the Senator says it should be.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, so far as my understanding is concerned, wholesalers were included as processors of meat. I think there can be no dispute about that.

The only difficulty was over the question of whether the small, independent processors or the nonslaughterers, who got their meat from an integrated meat supply, should have their status defined on the basis that they would have to show a profit on one line of processing or slaughtering, as compared with the profit an integrated meat processor might show on his complete line. To do so is impossible, because at times there is a good spread in the prices of pork, and at times there is a good spread in the prices of lamb, and at time there is a spread in the case of cattle prices; but at times there is no spread at all. Thus, it is unfair to make an independent processor show what his profits are on one segment of the processing of meat, when we permit the integrated slaughterer to figure all his profits against all his losses and thus show a profit in connection with the determination of what the price level should be. If we permit such a proposal to go into effect, we shall have smaller operators in the industry going out of business, as we had before. That is the difficulty I am attempting to iron out.

I do not recall that the question as to wholesalers ever came up. Certainly the retailers would not be included, unless they are also processors; and if they are processors, they should be given that consideration, regardless of whether they are independent packers or integrated packers, because, for example, an integrated packer handles meat from the time it is bought on the hoof until the time when it is sold to the consumer—all the way through. We want the same privilege extended, insofar as the consideration of costs are concerned, to either the independent slaughterers or the independent processors of meat. We want that privilege extended to all branches of the processing industry, and not be completely washed out in regard to one segment of the processing industry because of a retail price which might be set as a producer's price under a maximum ceiling.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am in thorough accord and sympathy with the objective the Senator from Nebraska has stated, and I remember very well the trouble independent meat processors had under an OPA meat section dominated by a vice president of the Armour Packing Co., a man who had no regard whatever for the independents.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The result was that restrictions were placed on the independents, and at one time the restriction which was imposed caused a drop of 2 or 3 cents in the price of meat cattle of a certain weight, which the authorities would not permit to move through the independents.

However, Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will permit the committee to confer with the legislative drafting service in respect to carrying out the purpose the Senator from Nebraska has stated, and to make sure that we do not go further than that.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have taken up this matter with the legislative drafting service, and I know exactly what the amendment will do. I understood that the distinguished Senator from Virginia was anxious to have the Senate vote on these amendments. I am perfectly willing to have a vote taken on the amendment.

If we are not ready to vote on the amendments now, I shall be glad simply to discuss the amendment, and then let the vote on it be taken tomorrow or at whatever other time it is agreed, by unanimous consent, that the vote be taken, if a unanimous-consent agreement for that purpose is necessary.

However, I know the meaning of the words which would be inserted by my amendment, and I know there is need for this definition. I also know that no hearings were held on the amendment, except for the hearings we had as a result of having the independent processors, one after another, come to the Special Committee on Small Business and attempt to get relief, without having a clear-cut definition of who are meant to be included as processors in the industry.

If the Senate accepts these three words, as an amendment, all processors, whether integrated or whether not integrated, will be able to figure their profits as a group on all the processing they do, and will not have to compete with processors who are integrated and who use all their operations in determining whether they have made a profit or a loss, in order to know what level of profit may be regarded as reasonable for that particular segment of the industry.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not reasonable to assume that in a few minutes we can reach agreement on this matter? I have consulted the representative of the legislative drafting service who attended all the hearings on the bill and worked with us in regard to preparation of the bill. He tells me that he does not know how far this proposed language will go. He is the expert who has been advising the committee and has been studying these matters all the way through. So I think he should have an opportunity to study this amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I wish to propound a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WHERRY. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as the Senator from Virginia has suggested, throughout the long hearings, which have been held both during the mornings and the afternoons, and often in the evenings, we on the committee have been conferring with the legislative counsel and with other experts. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the committee be authorized to meet at 5 o'clock this afternoon to consider the amendment, and to withdraw it until then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not going to withdraw it. The amendment is here, and I am going to proceed to discuss it.

However, I have no objection to giving the Legislative Drafting Service and the experts all the time that is desired. There are other Senators who wish to speak on the amendment, and I shall be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Banking and Currency Committee may be permitted to sit this afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no objection at all to that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, consent is granted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he yields the floor?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I have other questions to ask, but I am glad to yield. I do not think it is at all necessary to give unanimous consent to defer this amendment, which merely proposes the addition of three words.

If the Senate wishes to do what is provided in the Barkley-Bates amendment, that will be agreeable to me; but certainly there should be a clarifying definition, namely, that the processing industry includes every segment of that industry. That is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is proposed that the amendment be further amended by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] so as to include all commodities.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Indiana has offered an amendment to it, but his amendment is not before the Senate for consideration at this time, and it cannot be taken up until my amendment has been acted on one way or the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, in conjunction with the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, it is to protect against a situation where the price might be frozen as of a certain date, and that date might be one on which the price did not reflect a reasonable margin of profit to the processors.

Mr. WHERRY. No; that is not at all the purpose of this amendment. But I agree there is considerable merit in the observation made by the distinguished Senator from Delaware. The fact that the prices may be determined as of a certain date—for example, a day back in June—is something that ought to be given consideration, especially so far as the producer is concerned. But, if the Senator will let me state it again, all that this amendment does is to provide a definition, in order to further clarify the Barkley-Bates amendment, so that the processing industry will include every segment of the industry, regardless of the time as to which prices are fixed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, the reason I raise the point is that there might be a possibility also that the date selected would reflect to the processors a greater than average margin of profit.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the Senator that the processing industry as a whole might find that situation confronting it. All this amendment does is to provide that the processing industry shall include all elements of the industry; that is all. It does not have anything to do with freezing as of a certain date or unfreezing as of a certain date. But it certainly is going to be important as to what the price ceilings may be with regard to the producer, whether they go back to June or some date of that kind, or whether the prices of today are taken; and it is going to affect the whole processing industry to some extent, if a satisfactory date is not found. That is another question entirely apart from the one covered by my proposal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, does he not think that this bill should be safeguarded against the possibility that a date might be fixed on which the producer was not getting all that was coming to him? That is possible, by the same token that it is possible that he would be getting more.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the Senator. Last Thursday, on the Senate floor, I raised the point that this amendment, if adopted, and the possibility that the President might use the discretionary power to set ceilings and wages in regard to meat, was one of the things that were disturbing those who were about to buy land and feeder cattle. This is the time they put them into the feed lots. No one knows that better than the Senator from Kansas. We wanted to get an assurance from the distinguished chairman of the committee as to whether there were any hearings held which developed any evidence that there might be the imposition of a ceiling on meat, prior to next January. The very fact that there is any doubt in the minds of the administration officials that they are going to impose these controls, I tell the distinguished chairman, the Senator from South Carolina, will have a tremendous effect on the number of cattle that will go into the feed lots, the number of sheep that will go into the feed lots, and the number of hogs that will go into the feed lots, until the answer is given that has been requested by the Senator from Delaware. But that is an entirely different situation from the one at hand.

All in the world that the junior Senator from Nebraska is asking by this amendment is to have a definition that the processing industry shall include every segment of the industry; that is all.

It is a very simple amendment, and I think every Member of the Senate should be on his feet immediately in support of it, because it insures a fair margin of profit to those nonintegrated processors who do not have the opportunity of pooling profits on a number of operations; thus making up losses which might occur on one item of production. All we want is, if the Barkley-Bates amendment is adopted, that it be made to include the entire processing industry—and that means every element of it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, so that we may understand what the amendment does?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does the Senator from Nebraska want to include wholesalers and retailers, either or both?

Mr. WHERRY. I want to include any section of the meat industry that processes. If a wholesaler does not do processing of meat, he is not entitled to be considered as one of the segments.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator's amendment includes him.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It includes him, because he is a segment, getting the processed article to the consumer.

Mr. TAFT. He is not engaged in the work of the processor.

Mr. WHERRY. No, he does not do the work of the processor. Anyone who would so interpret the amendment certainly would have to stretch his imagination. All the retailer does is to buy his meat from a distributor or from someone who slaughters it, and put it on the counter, and if there are controls on sales, he charges the retail price, and he gets a profit on it. He does not slaughter the animal. He is not a processor in the sense that he integrates his activities from the live hoof clear down to the glue and the fertilizer.

Mr. TAFT and Mr. ROBERTSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me the word "processing" is a word which has always meant doing something to something. Never, under any circumstances has it meant buying and selling. "Process" means "manufacture," in some form or other. A retailer who cuts up meat may be a processor, but a wholesaler, I would say, would not be, ordinarily, because he would merely pass the meat on. But that is a question of fact. I do not see that there is any dispute about what it means.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does the Senator not think the language is so broad as to include those who carve the meat up, and that we have no way of knowing whether retailers and wholesalers are covered in their entirety or not? If the language were so framed that we knew it to be limited to what we conceived to be the processing, and took care of the independent dealers, in whom I am very much interested, I would support it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the amendment is as clear as crystal. If a wholesaler or a retailer processes meat, then his levels of profit must be maintained. Anyone certainly can understand that language. If he does not, of course he is not in the processing industry, and that is all there is to it. The amendment is proposed for the purpose of clarification. I am not proposing to broaden the language. All these segments come into the meat-distribution picture anyway. We are not proposing to set up something new. We are not proposing to set up new segments within the industry at all. We are simply defining what is already found in the Barkley-Bates amendment. What is it? It is that a reasonable margin of profit shall be allowed on the various species to the processing industry as a group. That is what the Barkley-Bates amendment does, without the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska.

What the Senator from Nebraska is attempting to do is, not to permit an OPA man or some other official, in administering the law, through some interpretation to crowd out any segments of the industry by setting price ceilings between the retailer and the producer, which would crowd him out. That is all I am attempting to do. I think they should be protected. So the amendment, I am satisfied, is clear, and I should like to have the committee accept it, if possible. If the committee will not accept it, I should like to have a vote on it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this discussion illustrates the fact that we do not know what we are doing.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. We do not know what provisions we have made in this bill. This entire provision regarding price control is premature. If those engaged in this particular industry are entitled to a profit, why is not everyone else in the United States entitled to a profit? What is the basis of picking out the meat industry in particular and giving them a special rule of cost plus a reasonable profit? There is no such rule in the bill itself, nor was there in the original price-control act. I may say, going back to the history of that act, that the Price Administrator fought this provision. He fought every provision to guarantee a man cost plus a reasonable profit, or to guarantee to any industry cost plus a reasonable profit. In fact, I remember arguments were made that for years certain products of the steel industry had always been sold at a loss; and to pick out those articles and say that they must have cost plus a reasonable profit meant an increase in price which should never take place and which they did not want to be forced to make. There was something in that contention. It is rather interesting to note that this particular bill says—and this is all it says by way of a general rule as to how prices are to be fixed:

> In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices * * * he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability—

Including various things, such as increases or decreases in cost of production, increases or decreases of profits. It also says:

> Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable.

Those words came from the original Price Control Act.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. But the Price Control Act of 1942 was stronger in this particular than is the pending bill, which was weakened when it was brought here, because the people affected did not want to be bound even as much as they were bound by the act of 1942. That act says that the Administrator shall ascertain and give due consideration to the operation prevailing between October 1 and October 15, 1941, for the commodity or commodities. It is not based on the industry; but for the commodity or commodities included under such regulation or order, and that he shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine and deem to be of general applicability. But in this bill there is nothing about making adjustments. It simply provides that he shall give due consideration to relevant facts.

Under the last act we had difficulty in determining what the rule should be. This was the provision of the last Price Control Act, the final provision which was adopted, and it was the subject upon which the President vetoed the Price Control Extension Act of 1946. The second Price Control Extension Act, which the President approved, provided a basis of cost to each industry in 1940, plus the increase in cost. If the industry did not make a profit in 1940, it did not get it under the Extension Act.

It provided that general price levels should be established for all commodities to bring about maximum production, and that no maximum price would be established or maintained for any product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry which did not return on the average to the industry not less than the average dollar price of such product during the base period, plus the average increases in costs of producing, manufacturing, or processing the same accruing since the base period. It was provided that the maximum price for a product should be taken in compliance with its standard if such price on the average was equal to the average current total cost of the product plus the industry's average over-all profit.

So, Mr. President, we did finally write into the old Price Control Act a provision which was not similar to this; it was not a guaranty of profit, but was a guaranty that if the cost increased, the industry as a whole would have its price increased to take care of the increase in costs.

In other words, Mr. President, this is a highly controversial subject. We ought to write in a provision for the packing industry. I do not object to this provision for the packing industry, except that the bill provides that the rule does not apply to other industries. It implies that by adopting it in the original act every other industry is subject to the completely arbitrary discretion of the administrator. If we are going to deal with this subject—it was hitched on as an amendment to deal with a particular situation, before—we should deal with it correctly. We should decide what the administrator is to do as to prices. Is he to take the existing situation and add to that the increase in costs as costs increase, or is he to cut down profits? Is he to try to fix a price that will guarantee costs plus a reasonable profit to the industry as a whole?

I do not think anyone would want to undertake to guarantee profits for each individual manufacturer. If we deal with this subject, we should deal with it comprehensively. We should see that every man in the United States has a similar right, not only for his benefit, but in order to avoid what happened in the last war, where one product after another disappeared entirely from the market. Meat disappeared from the market, and other products disappeared from the market. They disappeared because the price administrator set the prices so low that they did not pay anyone to go into that particular business, or they were forced into the black market.

That question should be considered if we want to avoid the problems which arose under the last Price Control Act. We should decide what the principle is going to be. In the last war, if the administrator thought someone was making too much money, he proceeded to cut down the price in some way so as to reduce that particular man's profit. I do not think that is the proper way to approach the question. I do not know whether the general provision which we adopted in 1946 is the proper way to approach it, but we should lay down now a rule as to what prices should be and the principle upon which the administrator shall fix prices more definitely than is provided for in the bill which is before us.

That affords, to my mind, another reason for postponing consideration of title IV until we can think the thing through, have hearings, and come back with a bill which will actually try to correct the difficulties which we experienced in the last war.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, inasmuch as I offered the amendment and the distinguished Senator from Ohio has been speaking to that amendment, I want to say that I am in complete agreement that if we are going to give a guaranty to the meat industry, there is no reason why other industries should not have it. I am not complaining about that. I think the amendment which is to be offered by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] should be given serious consideration. I feel that inasmuch if the meat amendment alone is adopted, just as in the case of fresh fruit in the amendment which has been adopted, there might be some interpretation which would exclude everything else. I think that makes it important that the Senator from Indiana should have his amendment considered.

I am not speaking to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana at all; I am simply talking about meat. We had price control and rationing to keep prices low to the consumer. We wanted to assure a supply to the consumer. What good is the legal price if the consumer cannot get meat? That was the experience in the last war. I have seen lines a hundred yards long, lines of housewives trying to get meat. When the first few persons were served, there was no more meat. Of course the legal price was there, but what good is that if there is not adequate production? Why was lack of production brought about? Because, when the administrator established the levels, he did not give the processing industry the amount of money necessary to produce a reasonable profit. Then what happened? The man went to other sources of supply. He said, "I cannot get it through my normal channels of trade." So he paid more money for it, and that started the black market.

In 1946, in the Union Stockyards in Omaha, where approximately 15,000 cattle a day are slaughtered, there were less than 400 cattle in the feed lot, because the black market was siphoning-off the source of supply.

A price-control bill has been dumped into the Senate giving the President all the power he wants. But that is not the proper way to legislate. No adequate hearings were held on the bill. If segments of the industry were called in to testify as to this one little amendment, I am quite satisfied they would corroborate the statements I have made. I am simply trying to make a better bill out of what has been brought to the Senate. If we do not deal properly with all elements of the processing industry, some of them will be forced out of business, or they will resort to the black market. When that occurs, we have started the first dislocation, which will go on down to the consumer level, and the housewives, who otherwise would receive meat through normal channels of trade, will not get the meat to which they are entitled. So, I say, what good is a legal price if the product is not available to hand out over the counter?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator if what he has said is not based on actual observation? It is not theory, but it is based on actual practice which the Senator has observed. Is that correct?

Mr. WHERRY. I will say to the distinguished Senator that it is based on actual practice. I do not claim all the experience and knowledge in connection with these questions, but I come from a section of the country which produces meat. It raises corn, and we feed lambs, hogs, poultry, and cattle. It is a great State in which to operate. If Senators from the South would like to come there, we can show them good land, good corn, and good cattle. The Senator from Missouri knows something of the process.

I should like to say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that we had better establish these levels so that those who feed cattle can produce the necessary meat. If we do not, they will not produce the cattle. That is all there is to that. It is very simple.

We are starting now in this new control price bill to do what? To create almost untold power to allocate and set price ceilings on meat and other products. In administration of the former Emergency Price Control Act, processors stated they were completely crowded out of the market. That is the first step in black-market operations.

I am quite satisfied that the distinguished Senator from Virginia agrees with me at least in principle. This will provide the first step. The Senator from Ohio is correct when he states that if we are to set up a formula we should start with the producer. We must go back to the producer. What are we to pay him? What kind of profit are we to give him? Many people think that what the producer gets for his steer is all profit. People forget that the cattle must be bought in the open market. Today cattle are selling for $27 a hundred pounds. The feeder who buys the cattle must pay for the corn and the other feed he puts into the cattle. He ought to be taken care of as well as the processors of the meat.

I say to Senators that this is the beginning, and unless all the levels are taken care of with a reasonable profit we will have black-market operations all over again. Not only that, but we shall have black market operations in corn itself. That is where corn will go. In that case we would limit production. Instead of getting more production we would limit production. We would get a loss instead of an increase. The meat would not go through normal channels. We must start with the producer in the meat industry, the meat must be distributed in normal channels, and a reasonable profit must be assured to everyone. The so-called Barkley-Bates amendment and the clarifying wording offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska is a step in the right direction. I hope the Senate will accept the amendment.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, if, in view of his experience on the Small Business Committee, he will not agree with me that the last dislocation which happened due to black market operations occurred because legitimate operators were not protected on some kind of live-and-let-live equitable profit basis.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. That is the reason we are asking that this amendment be adopted. Legitimate operators could not live on the prices allowed, so they were forced out of the regular channels of supply.

When they went out to get a new source of supply, in order that they could have a fair and reasonable profit, black markets sprang up all over the country. The Senator from Kansas well knows the results of the investigation made by the Small Business Committee. We heard about the discrimination from the witnesses who came by the hundreds to testify before the committee. They convinced me and the members of the committee, and their testimony should convince the Members of the Senate, that unless we provide for the various segments of the industry, dislocations will be caused again. If that happens, the black market operations will start all over again.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I would be willing to be in favor of the Senator's amendment if we could agree on what it means. When the Senator uses the word "processor," and adds to it "each segment thereof" does he mean processors in the ordinary and accepted meaning of the term, or is he attempting to include a wholesaler who does nothing but get a carcass and deliver it to the retail butcher, or someone who performs nothing more than a brokerage service, let us say? Does the Senator include the local butcher who cuts up the meat into pounds, wraps it up, and sells it to a customer? When the Senator speaks of a processor, does he mean a processor?

Mr. WHERRY. A processor means anyone who processes meat. Some retailers make liverwurst, and some retailers smoke hams. I suppose they would be considered processors of meat. Most retailers simply sell the meat over the counter.

My amendment is very clear. It speaks of the segments of the processing industry. Anyone who processes meat is entitled to his fair margin of profit in the group in which he competes by species, instead of taking the over-all profit of an integrated processing concern, which can put the price down on pork, for example, and use the entire profit of the business to show that it is making a profit, in order to drive completely out of business the small independent producer who deals only in one specie.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not true that the black market operations in meat which became to noticeable after the end of the war, particularly in August 1945, resulted primarily from the fact that the consumer did not have enough red stamps to get the meat and was prepared to pay higher prices for it in the black market?

Mr. WHERRY. Of course some people did not get enough ration stamps. However, that was not the reason. Time after time there was no meat on the counters, because it had gone into the black market. This amendment would clarify the situation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope it will. I should like to make a further observation. The Senator from Ohio has stated that this is a good illustration of the fact that we do not know what we are doing. The Senator from Nebraska said—and it is true—that we have had no hearings on the amendment. I heard no one testify on it. It was not discussed in the committee. I never saw the amendment until last Friday. It is my understanding that the distinguished Vice President when he was a Senator had it incorporated into the old law during World War II. I understand that he gave it to the chairman of the committee and said that it was in the previous law, and he said to him, "Will you offer it?" He came to me and he said, "It was in the law before."

I said, "My whole idea is to try to get a bill as near to what we had before, because that law has been interpreted and explained. I will accept the amendment." The only thing I heard since then was by way of a letter I received from a big packing industry, asking me to support the Maybank amendment. I wrote them I would support it.

If we had had this proposal before the committee, when we had before us a representative of the former OPA, we would have asked him, "What does this mean? How was it interpreted? Was it satisfactory?" Then we could have come before the Senate with some worthwhile information. We did not receive that information, and this is not a good illustration of the fact that we have brought out a bill about which none of us know anything.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I raised on the floor of the Senate last Thursday the very point the Senator from Virginia is discussing. If he will turn to page 77 of the bill he will find that it is provided in subsection 2:

> In order to carry out the purposes declared in section 2 of this act, the President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, banking, insurance, and agriculture with a view to encouraging the making, by persons engaged in industry, business, financing, and agriculture, of voluntary agreements approved by the President—
> * * * * *
> (2) providing for priority, allocation and inventory control of scarce materials necessary for the national defense;

I cannot find one bit of evidence adduced from industry by the Banking and Currency Committee under which some kind of formula might be set forth to guide the administrator of the proposals set forth in sec. 712. I think it is absolutely necessary that sec. 712, subsection 2, be amended so that allocations and priorities can be made to provide for distribution through the normal channels of trade. In order to assure the least amount of black marketing possible, the source of supply should continue to be distributed to normal purchasers, to the extent, percentagewise, which they have purchased during a typical base period.

Unless that is done, there will be distortion, there will be dislocations, there will be a man in the fuel business who will have to run to some new source of supply, there will be a man in the newsprint business who will have to get a new source of supply, there will be a man in the steel business who will have to get a new source of supply. Yet no formula is set up, as a result of the experience of the Congress or the experience of the American people during the Second World War, which would enable Congress to get the information and the background so that it could provide a rule.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from Virginia and to the Members of the Senate that more thought should be given to a price control measure if it is to be effective. It certainly is a congressional responsibility to help write any formulas, if the President is to put them into effect, formulas which will protect the segments of the economy of the United States, in order that we may get more production clear down the line rather than circumvent it. Unless we do, we will defeat the very purpose for which the legislation is being presented to the Senate today.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, answering the distinguished Senator from Virginia, what I said was that the offhand presentation of the amendment shows that the committee has given no consideration to the basic question of the formula on which all prices will be fixed, because here we are asked to give to the packing industry a formula, under which the processing industry shall have a reasonable margin of profit, in each one of the activities, as to cattle, as to lambs, as to hogs. There is nothing in the bill to the effect that any other industry is to get any reasonable margin of profit on anything. There is no such general formula incorporated in the bill.

Certainly if we are to give consideration to the question of a formula for the packing industry, the committee should have considered the question of a formula for all industry. There are three or four different formulas. There was a long debate, during the consideration of the last OPA extension bill, as to what the formulas should be. I have read some of those which were actually incorporated in the 1946 bill. A formula was provided for taking a man's costs into consideration, simply saying that if the cost increased $10 over what he paid in 1940 he could then get $10 more in his profit. In other words, he could still get the profit he received in 1940. Perhaps that is not the right formula. It certainly seems to me that if we are going into this question at all, the committee should review the whole subject and consider what the formula should be, whether we are to say that every industry is entitled to a profit in its over-all activities, or, following the theory of the OPA in the last war, consider whether producers are entitled to a profit on each product. The OPA objected to that, for instance, in the steel industry, in which many articles had always been made and sold at a loss. The OPA thought the manufacturers should not be given a profit on such a product.

In my remarks to the Senator from Virginia I was not making any criticism of the committee, but a criticism of considering this matter at all unless we give complete consideration to it. The presentation of an amendment providing for a formula in the packing industry shows that we have not given any consideration to what the formula should be in the over-all fixing of profits.

While the Senator from Virginia said he wanted to see the bill made as much like the last act as possible, the fact is that the basic formula, as I read it earlier, is not so strong as in the original act. The bill does not provide that the President must make allowance for increases in cost, as the former price-control act did. We could at least go back to that original formula.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] desires to discuss the amendment 20 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded, and that further proceedings under the call be abandoned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Delaware is recognized.

THE THREAT OF UNCONTROLLED INFLATION

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, last Friday the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] made a very clear analysis of the bill from the standpoint of the authorities. This afternoon, as briefly as possible, I wish to discuss the bill not from the standpoint of the authorities, because I am not a lawyer, but rather as one who worked on the price-control legislation in the last war.

I believe that never in the history of our country have we faced a greater crisis than that with which we are confronted this afternoon. I make that statement not because of the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, or because of the reverses we have suffered in that area, because notwithstanding those reverses I have the utmost confidence in our military forces to handle the Korean situation or any other situation which may arise. I think the real crisis with which we are confronted today is not the threat of the communistic armies but rather the threat of uncontrolled inflation within our own borders.

On many occasions in the past our country has been confronted with inflationary threats, and each time we have been successful in coping with the situation. However, what makes the existing threat more serious is that at this time we are approaching this crisis with a $257,000,000,000 debt hanging over us and an annual peacetime budget in excess of $40,000,000,000.

There are many who will argue that the existing inflationary threat is the result of the increased expenditures which will now be required under our military program due to the Korean outbreak. It is true that because of recent international developments our military programs will require the appropriation of many additional billions. But while these additional military expenditures will necessitate a drastic change in our economy, it cannot be said that these new expenditures are the sole reason for the existing inflationary threat. They are only the excuse.

No one has been able to determine just which straw broke the camel's back, nor has any economist been able to determine which expenditure it is that will push a country from financial stability into uncontrolled inflation, or at just what point it will come.

Our country was already operating on a record peacetime annual budget in excess of $40,000,000,000, and during the past few days the administration has asked for additional appropriations approximating $14,000,000,000 for our armed services. As one Member of the Senate, I expect to support the request of our military leaders for whatever amount they think necessary adequately to protect this country. I do not feel that I am in a position at this time to question their needs. However, I want it understood that, while I am supporting these full military appropriations without question, it does not mean that I will not be examining very carefully the manner in which these funds are spent.

As a result of the inflationary threat which the administration is attributing to these increased military expenditures, it is now being proposed that Congress place this country under a strait-jacket of controls such as were not even experienced during World War II. While I agree with the administration that the present situation is of such a serious nature that we have no choice other than to authorize the necessary controls, I do not agree with the administration that inflation is inevitable or that this crisis is entirely as a result of the outbreak in Korea.

This inflationary threat might have been avoided and even now could be substantially diminished if the administration would only place its own house in order. For 18 years our Government has been dedicated to the philosophy of tax, spend, and elect. During this 18-year period, first under the New Deal and then under the so-called Fair Deal, there has been no effort whatever made by the administration officials to live within our income. Their whole philosophy for this period has been one of complying with the request of every pressure group for the sole purpose of perpetuating themselves into power. Through deficit financing and dollar devaluation, the cost of these socialistic programs has been concealed from the American people by borrowing the money and charging it against the future generations.

As a result of this reckless spending policy followed by the administration for the past 18 years, we have witnessed in this country a gradual undermining of the value of the American dollar. Long before the Korean outbreak many leading economists in this country were becoming seriously alarmed at this condition and were issuing repeated warnings both to the Congress and to the President that unless this deficit spending program was abandoned there was a grave danger of inflation in this country. These warnings have been falling on deaf ears.

Last year Congress increased the appropriations of the executive branch of our Government by $5,000,000,000 more than was spent during the preceding year. A major part of this increase was to take care of the increased subsidy programs promised during the 1948 political campaign. As if that were not bad enough there was another 5-percent increase in this year's appropriation. The extra money has been appropriated largely for the purpose of buying the 1950 election. These increased appropriations cannot be attributed to the military expenditures since practically all of the increase authorized both in 1949 and 1950 was to cover the cost of new or enlarged domestic programs.

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], one of the ablest authorities on Government finance in this country, supported by a very small minority in the United States Senate, has been fighting a losing battle to reduce these expenditures and achieve a balanced budget. The repeated warnings of the Senator from Virginia and many others that this country was inevitably headed toward national insolvency unless this reckless spending policy was reversed have gone unheeded.

I feel that since these unnecessary expenditures have not been curtailed and in view of the serious threat of inflation with which we are now confronted, we have no alternative other than to consider the almost complete regimentation of the American economy. I say that as one who always has been and always will be opposed to unnecessary Government controls.

However, in reaching this conclusion, I am not willing to attribute the cause for these controls to the outbreak in Korea. It is my firm opinion that with or without the outbreak in Korea this country, as a result of the stupid blunders and the reckless spending policy of the present administration has been for the past several years headed toward an inevitable catastrophe.

The outbreak in Korea only brought this situation to a dramatic climax. Had this not occurred the Administration might have been able to continue its deficit spending program 1, 5, or even 10 more years, but sooner or later some incident was bound to arise which would bring directly home to the American people the fact that our Government was approaching insolvency.

We must not overlook the fact that the devaluation of the American dollar will affect most seriously those who can least afford it. The older people of this country whose income is dependent upon Government bonds, bank accounts, insurance policies, and pensions, are the ones who are most vitally affected. As the purchasing value of the dollar depreciates it is this group of people, whose earning capacity is gone, who are the real sufferers. For the past 18 years this "planned inflation" policy of the administration has been sending our old people to the poor house.

However grave this situation is—and I most certainly do not underestimate its seriousness—I am one who feels that there is a solution to our problem. Regardless of the fact that for 18 years this administration has been deliberately undermining the value of the American dollar, I believe that this trend can be checked and reversed if we as political leaders in this country would only display a small percentage of the courage which is now being displayed by the American boys in Korea.

We in our official capacity in order to cope with this situation are now compelled to endorse a legislative program calling upon the American people to give up many of the luxuries and freedoms to which they have been accustomed.

But before asking the people to make the sacrifices, the Government should place its own house in order. This should be done by taking the following steps immediately:

First. We should, in very plain language tell the American people that the domestic programs from which they are now benefiting are either going to be stopped entirely or drastically curtailed. All subsidies to the American farmers, the American laborers, the American businessmen should be stopped immediately. It is perfectly ridiculous for our Government to spend billions annually for the sole purpose of pushing the prices of certain commodities higher and then at the same time ask Congress to pass a law for the purpose of holding these same prices down.

Second. An immediate overhauling of the machinery of our Government is essential with the thought of eliminating duplications and reducing Government personnel to the fullest extent practical. The outline of a program to achieve this greater efficiency in Government is available through the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. These recommendations up to this time have been ignored insofar as economy is concerned. As of this date the only parts of the Hoover Commission's proposals which have been accepted by the administration in its reorganization plans have been those proposals which tended to give the executive departments additional power and increased salaries. I do not know of a single executive department of this Government that is not costing more money to operate today than it cost before its reorganization.

Third. In view of both the fact that our budget is unbalanced and the fact that there is the threat of a shortage of strategic materials in this country, the Government should immediately postpone work on all Government projects upon which work has not been begun and which are not found to be essential to our national defense program. Those Government projects which are now under construction and upon which work could be stopped without resulting in an unnecessary loss to the Government should likewise be suspended immediately.

There are hundreds of such projects, and as just one example of the type of project upon which I think work should be suspended I shall cite a project in my own State and in my own county, namely, the Indian River project. Work upon this project along with hundreds of other similar projects located in the other 47 States should be postponed for the duration of this emergency. While desirable from many angles, their completion at this time will not contribute one iota toward the defense of this country. By a vote of 49 to 34 last week, Congress refused to take this essential step.

Fourth—and by far not the least in importance—the Government instead of continuously condemning the American people as hoarders should put an immediate stop to its own policy of accumulating and hoarding huge quantities of food products. These products are not needed for our military establishments but are being purchased for the sole purpose of creating an artificial shortage and forcing prices higher.

Instead of accumulating additional inventories at this time the Government should reverse its policy and begin unloading upon the markets their huge inventories now approaching $4,000,000,000. This would serve a dual purpose. It would check the present inflationary trend in food prices and at the same time would achieve a savings of hundreds of millions to the taxpayers. But instead of using these holdings as a key to check the inflationary threat, the Government is actually doing the opposite.

Only last week my attention was called to four specific examples of governmental waste which have been going on even since the outbreak in Korea. On July 30, 1950, the Department of Agriculture was holding in the warehouses the equivalent of 300,000,000 dozen eggs at a cost of 32 cents per dozen; they had 165,000,000 pounds of butter which cost 60 cents per pound; they had 63,000,000 pounds of cheese which cost 31 cents per pound—all of which were being withheld from the market for the purpose of maintaining higher prices for these commodities.

During the past 4 weeks these already burdensome inventories have been further increased. Additional quantities of eggs have been accumulated at a rate of 12,000,000 dozen per week; butter has been accumulated at the rate of over 1,500,000 pounds per day; additional quantities of cheese have been accumulated at the rate of 15,000,000 pounds per month—all of which have been packed away in caves and warehouses along with the other huge inventories of the same products.

Public Law No. 434 specifically authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to turn over any of these surplus food commodities which are in good condition to the Armed Forces as might be required by them. This provision was incorporated in the law with the thought that since the Armed Forces would need some of these commodities, it would save the taxpayers a substantial amount if they would draw from the surplus holdings. This provision of the law should especially have been complied with during the recent weeks when we have had criticism of the rise in food prices and the expression of concern on the part of the President. However, this provision of the law has been completely ignored, and we find that during the past 4 weeks, during which time the Secretary of Agriculture was accumulating additional inventories, the Armed Forces were filling their requirements by purchasing in the open markets as follows: 4,910,350 dozen eggs at 40 cents per dozen, total cost, $1,950,504; 4,131,022 pounds butter, total cost, $2,508,267; 954,664 pounds cheese, total cost, $331,727.

However, I thing the most stupid transaction which has come to my attention is the situation where during the past 30 days the Department of Agriculture has been buying U. S. No. 1 potatoes from the farmers in North Carolina at an average cost of $1.68 per hundredweight, and then immediately—without even moving those potatoes from the farms, in many instances—reselling them to the same farmers for 1 cent a bag, to be dumped either as fertilizer or in the hog lots. At the same time the Armed Forces, to meet their requirements, needed 23½ million pounds of potatoes. Instead of having the Department of Agriculture turn over to the Armed Forces some of those U. S. No. 1 potatoes which were being dumped in the hog lots, we find that the Armed Forces were purchasing their potatoes in the open market at a cost of $2.95 per hundredweight.

I shall not take time to enumerate further the absurd and contradictory policies of this administration, but the few items to which I have just called attention represent an unnecessary expenditure, during the past 4 weeks, by the United States Armed Forces of approximately $6,000,000—every dime of which could have been saved to the taxpayers had the administration complied with the clear intent of the law.

If that is a fair sample of what has been going on during the past 12 months, it is little wonder that we find the American troops in Korea without tanks and the other necessary equipment.

If the administration would take these corrective steps, and thereby would place its own house in order, it would remove much of the pressure of the existing inflationary threat, and at the same time would reduce the effect of whatever controls or higher taxes which might be necessary to maintain our economy on an even keel.

However, in view of the financial condition of our Government, and being confronted as we are with the inevitable necessity of appropriating many additional billions of dollars to rebuild our armed strength, I feel that additional controls and higher taxes, as unpleasant as they are, will be necessary to insure a proper allocation of existing supplies and to guard against any wartime profiteering.

In imposing these controls, we must not make the same mistakes which were made in the last war, at which time the Government attempted to control prices without placing similar controls upon wages. As we mobilize the economy of this country under the existing emergency, we must make sure that all of the 150,000,000 Americans are treated on a basis of equality. There must be no exemptions for any special group in the name of political expediency.

Prices cannot be controlled unless, in turn, wages are controlled. It is unfair to control both prices and wages unless, in turn, industrial profits are controlled. Through increased rates of taxation, the wartime profits of both corporations and individuals must be siphoned off to pay for our increased military defense programs.

Undoubtedly, this will work hardships on the different groups affected; however, if each group knows that the others are making an equal contribution, there will be much less objection.

As the Senate considers the Defense Production Act of 1950, it is essential that we make very sure that all loopholes are plugged and that all groups are treated fairly and on a basis of equality.

First. Prices: For instance, if price controls are deemed necessary to curb the rising cost of living, the base price for such price ceilings must be selected as of a specified date in the period immediately preceding the outbreak in Korea. Any variations from that level, other than changes which might be deemed necessary on a specific commodity which might have happened to be selling at either an exceptionally high or exceptionally low level as of that date, should be on a flat percentage basis. To select any date following the outbreak in Korea as a base upon which price ceilings would be imposed would be the equivalent of giving special advantages to every profiteer who jumped the gun by immediately raising his prices as a result of the war. By the same token, we would be placing a penalty on every patriotic citizen who cooperated in holding down his prices. To incorporate in this bill the suggestion that automatic price-controls become effective whenever the price index has risen to a certain level, is worse than no legislation at all. The adoption of such a proposal would be an open invitation to hysterical buying as prices approached that specified level. Again, it would be an open invitation to both merchants and manufacturers to immediately begin raising their prices to safeguard against being caught with a low ceiling on their products.

I reemphasize that we have no alternative, if we are going to impose price and wage controls, other than to select a date prior to the Korean outbreak.

Second. Wages: All of the arguments which I have advanced for selecting as a base for price ceilings some date prior to the outbreak in Korea are equally applicable to the date upon which wages should be frozen. In fairness to both groups, wages and prices must be frozen as of the same date. Any increases from the level on that date should be made strictly on a percentage basis. Selection of a later date would start a stampede among the unions to obtain another round of wage increases prior to the freeze.

Again, when the administration considers freezing the wages of employees in industry, the government as the largest employer has an obligation to set an example. On the same date, when wages in industry are frozen, the salaries of all government employees must likewise be frozen and rolled back to that same date. All automatic promotions or salary increases which normally occur with Government employees, at that time must be suspended for the duration. That was not done during the last war, and we then had the situation in which Government employees who were enforcing the controls over industry were receiving automatic salary increases. The Government officials will be much more sympathetic to the problems of the civilian working man if they are subjected to the same hardships.

Third. Taxes: One of the most unpleasant duties of the Members of Congress is to vote for tax increases. However, in this instance, Congress has no alternative other than to vote for a tax increase sufficient to cover the operating costs of this Government. With a $257,000,000,000 debt, we cannot afford a further debt increase.

To reduce to the minimum the percentage of the necessary tax increase, it is imperative that we take the steps I have outlined today, whereby substantial reductions will be made in nonessential governmental expenditures. After every possible reduction has been made in the cost of running the Government, Congress should then plug all existing loopholes in our present tax structure by repealing the special tax exemptions which now are being enjoyed by cooperative organizations and other types of institutions and foundations. At the same time, to prove our sincerity, we should repeal the special tax-exemption now enjoyed by the President and Vice President of the United States and the Members of Congress. We must make very sure that the tax load is distributed in the most equitable manner possible.

Safeguards: (a) When the power to control both prices and wages and to regulate the law of supply and demand is placed in the hands of bureaus here in Washington, that will mean that in the hands of a small number of men we shall be placing the power to regulate and to influence the price of commodities on the exchanges in this country. Following the last war, a disgraceful situation was disclosed—one in which certain prominent Government officials who had access to confidential information had been making fortunes gambling on the commodity markets. To prevent any repetition of this wartime profiteering on the part of Government officials or the misuse of confidential information, this bill should be amended to prohibit any Government official, including Members of Congress, from either speculating in the commodity markets himself or from passing on to his friends confidential information as to prospective Government decisions which will have influence on these markets.

(b) Following the last war we found numerous instances of questionable nature where Government employees who during the war years were negotiating contracts with certain corporations and after the contracts were signed obtained employment at large salaries with the same corporations. Many of those incidents had the appearance of being "pay-offs." To prevent a recurrence of such instances, the bill now before us should be amended so as to prohibit the employment within a period of at least 2 years of any Government employee by a concern with which, as a Government employee, he was in a position to negotiate or influence wartime contracts.

I doubt if there is a single Member of the United States Senate who is more opposed to unnecessary Government control than I. I was elected to the United States Senate in 1946 largely on the strength of my opposition to unnecessary Government regimentation of the American citizens. During my 4 years in the Senate I have consistently opposed the expansion of the socialistic programs of the Fair Deal administration, and I have done what I could to reduce Government expenditures and the Government's encroachments upon the rights of its citizens. It has always been my contention that the American citizens would eventually be forced to sacrifice their individual freedoms in return for these subsidy programs.

Through Federal aid and Federal subsidy programs under the guise of welfare and security we in America for the past 18 years have been selling our birthright of freedom for the proverbial mess of pottage. We have completely forgotten the warning of Benjamin Franklin, who said that he who trades freedom for security will lose both.

But today, largely as a result of the reckless spending policy and the blunders of this administration, our country is faced with a grave crisis. I feel that under the existing circumstances we have no alternative now but to mobilize the entire economy of this country on a wartime footing. As we do this, it is inevitable that every American must for the time being be called upon to sacrifice some of the freedoms which we have come to accept as our heritage.

However, in endorsing the need for controls over our economy, along with higher taxes, I want it understood that I am not willing to extend to the President any such blanket endorsement of authority as is being proposed by certain administration supporters. The bill now before us must be amended in such a manner that while it will give the President sufficient authority over the economy of this country both to protect our national security and to cope with this inflationary threat it will, at the same time, include safeguards adequate to protect the rights of the American people. Under this bill as it now stands, the President could authorize the nationalization of our great steel industry, along with the nationalization of such of our other large industries, as he saw fit. The President has already on previous occasions expressed his intention and desire for Government operation of the steel industry. It is essential that we be very careful that we are not stampeded into passing legislation which will destroy the very principles for which we are fighting.

It is with extreme reluctance and great misgivings that I have arrived at a position where I am willing to extend to the administration any additional powers or controls over our citizens because I know that there are in this administration many officials who, while they are now advocating these controls as a wartime measure, yet I recognize them as the same officials who for the past several years have been advocating a planned economy for our country. I question the intentions of these administration officials in their promise to relinquish these additional powers once this emergency is over, and to safeguard against this danger these powers should be extended on a 1-year basis only. Then Congress each year could survey the situation to determine the necessity for their further extension. The American people who are now being called upon to sacrifice many of their individual freedoms for the security of this country should serve notice on all Government officials that regardless of their political affiliations that through the power of the ballot they will hold directly responsible all those officials who condone dishonesty in government or who fail to assist in eliminating all nonessential Government expenditures. Their insistence upon this action will minimize the effect and reduce the period in which any tax increase or controls are necessary. I send to the desk certain amendments to H. R. 3936 which will carry out these recommendations. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments offered for myself and for the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed; and, without objection, the amendments will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 76, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following:

"(e) Section 284 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(b) Whoever, having been employed in any department or agency of the United States (including the Armed Forces of the United States), within 2 years after negotiating or participating in the negotiation of any contract on behalf of the United States or any department or agency thereof, shall accept employment with any other party to such contract shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.'

"Notwithstanding the provisions of section 716 of this act, this subsection shall continue in effect after June 30, 1952."

On page 82, line 9, after the word "shall" insert a comma and the following: "except as otherwise provided."

On page 76, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following:

"(e) Chapter 15 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'§ 292. Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives or of the Armed Forces of the United States), shall speculate directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or shall knowingly publish or disclose any information designated by the President as confidential for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both. As used in this section, the term "speculate" shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity. The President shall designate as confidential any information which would give any person an undue advantage in trading on any commodity exchange. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 716 of this act, this subsection shall continue in effect after June 20, 1952.'"

On page 82, line 9, after the word "shall", insert a comma and the following: "except as otherwise provided."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3666) to extend for 5 years the authority to provide for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 248) to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 2121. An act to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey abandoned school properties in the Territory of Alaska to local school officials; and

H. R. 8230. An act to amend the act of March 11, 1948 (62 Stat. 78), relating to the establishment of the De Soto National Memorial, in the State of Florida.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

H. R. 4584. An act to provide for disposition of lands on the Cabazon, Augustine, and Torres-Martinez Indian Reservations in California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6958. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to isue a patent in fee to Francis Lee Edwards;

H. R. 7017. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Edgar S. Bigman; and

H. J. Res. 431. Joint resolution providing for recognition and endorsement of the California World Progress Exposition.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 602. An act for the relief of Fritz Busche;

H. R. 4136. An act for the relief of Helen M. Booth;

H. R. 4852. An act for the relief of Graphic Arts Corp. of Ohio;

H. R. 4989. An act to provide for the payment of just compensation to John Ii Estate Ltd., a Hawaiian corporation, for the taking by the United States of private fishery rights in Pearl Harbor, Island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 9023. An act to amend the Hatch Act; and

H. J. Res. 21. Joint resolution to provide for the utilization of the unfinished portion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol to portray (1) the Civil War, (2) the Spanish-American War, and (3) the birth of aviation in the United States.

ADMISSION INTO UNITED STATES OF ALIEN BRIDES AND MINOR CHILDREN OF CITIZEN MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1858) to permit the admission of alien spouses and minor children of citizen members of the United States Armed Forces, which was, on page 2, line 5, strike out "ninety days" and insert "six months."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is the bill to let the Asiatic brides of American servicemen enter the United States for permanent residence. The House has amended the bill in one respect only, to permit 6 months after the effective date of the act, rather than 90 days, as was provided in the text which was approved by the Senate, within which the brides of servicemen might come to this country.

The amendment is entirely acceptable to the senior Senator from Nevada, as author of this bill; and I am sure it would be approved by the Committee on the Judiciary. Accordingly, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN IMMIGRANTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House Joint Resolution 238, to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The report was read.

(For conference report, see pp. 12668–12670 of today's House proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. McCARRAN. The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 238), as it passed the House of Representatives, provided for the elimination from our naturalization laws of the racial barriers to naturalization. The bill was subsequently passed by the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute which limited the operative effect of the bill to persons of the Japanese race. The effect of the Senate version of the bill would be to retain the racial barrier to naturalization against persons of certain other races.

It was the judgment of the conference that we should follow the version of the bill as it initially passed the House of Representatives, namely, to eliminate all racial barriers to naturalization but that in so doing we should incorporate in the bill certain procedural safeguards in order to assure, so far as possible, that disloyal persons would not be admitted to citizenship. Accordingly, the bill, as amended by the conference, provides for a more thorough screening of applicants to citizenship and precludes from citizenship Communists and other subversives.

I ask unanimous consent that a statement of the managers on the part of the Senate at the conference be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS OF THE PART OF THE SENATE

The managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendment of the Senate in the nature of a substitute to the resolution (H. J. Res. 238) to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence (joint resolution to remove the racial restrictions on naturalization in the case of certain Japanese persons who entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924) submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on.

The resolution as it passed the House of Representatives provided that the right to become a naturalized citizen of the United States shall not be denied or abridged because of race. This resolution also provided that no alien who, under law existing immediately prior to enactment of the resolution, would have been ineligible to immigrate to the United States because of race shall be come eligible for immigration to the United States by reason of the adoption of the resolution.

The net effect of the resolution as passed by the House of Representatives would be to remove all racial barriers to naturalization of those persons who are legally in the United States at the time of enactment of the resolution.

The resolution as amended by the Senate extended the provisions of existing section 303 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, to include Japanese persons and persons of Japanese descent who (1) entered the United States (including the Territory of Hawaii) prior to July 1, 1924; (2) have resided continuously in the United States (including the Territory of Hawaii) since such entry, and (3) are not subject to deportation.

The net effect of the resolution as passed by the Senate would be to extend the privilege of naturalization only to those Japanese persons and persons of Japanese descent who have resided in the United States, including the Territory of Hawaii, since July 1, 1924, and who are not subject to deportation, but several Asian racial groups such as the Burmese, Indonesians, Koreans, Maoris, Polynesians, Samoans, and Siamese would, under the Senate amendment, still remain on the list of races barred from United States citizenship.

The resolution as agreed to by the conferees provides that the House version of the resolution be adopted with an amendment, namely, insertion of the phrase "subject to the provisions of this act." This additional language insures that all aliens eligible to petition for naturalization under the provisions of section 303 as amended by House Joint Resolution 238 will be subject to all of the other provisions of the Nationality Act. The insertion of this additional language meetc the objections raised when the resolution was before the Senate that the resolution might permit a great many other aliens to be naturalized who were not otherwise eligible under all of the provisions of the nationality laws.

In terms of figures, the resolution as agreed to by the conferees, would make eligible for naturalization about 48,000 persons of the Japanese race residing in the continental United States and about 33,000 such persons residing in the Territory of Hawaii. In addition, the resolution would make eligible for naturalization approximately 700 Koreans residing in the continental United States and about 2,300 Koreans residing in Hawaii, plus less than 150 persons of the other, above-mentioned, Asian races of which about 20 percent reside in the Territory of Hawaii and the rest in the continental United States.

The following table illustrates the numerical extent of the effect of this resolution:

Aliens eligible to citizenship under H. J. Res. 238: Continental United States and Hawaii, 1940

Alien people	Residing in—		Total	Percentage in United States
	United States	Hawaii
Japanese	47,305	37,353	84,658	55.99
Korean	749	2,390	3,139	20.7
Other Asian	104	41	145	71.7
Total	48,158	39,784	87,942	54.8

Source: Sixteenth United States Census.

In recommending the adoption of the resolution substantially as passed by the House of Representatives, the conferees have fully realized that the highly desirable extension of eligibility to naturalization calls for additional safeguards and that, therefore, section 305 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, should be amended. Accordingly, the conferees recommend the addition of a new section to House Joint Resolution 238, which in amending section 305 prohibits naturalization of any alien who at any time within a period of 10 years immediately preceding the filing of the petition for naturalization is, or has been found to be, within any of the general classes enumerated therein.

The amendments proposed to section 305 are substantially as follows:

(1) Naturalization is specifically prohibited to anyone who within 10 years preceding the naturalization has belonged to the Communist Party of the United States; any other totalitarian party of the United States; the Communist political association; the Communist or other totalitarian party of any State of the United States, of any foreign state, or of any political or geographical subdivision of any foreign state; any section, subsidiary, branch, affiliate, or subdivision of any such association or party; or the direct predecessors or successors of any such association or party, regardless of what name such group or organization may have used, may now bear, or may hereafter adopt.

(2) The Attorney General is required to publish in the Federal Register at least once in every calendar year a list containing the name of every organization which, after appropriate investigation and on the basis of evidence or information satisfactory to him, he deems to be Communist, Fascist, totalitarian, subversive to the national security, or as having adopted a policy of advocating or approving the commission of acts of force or violence to deny others their rights under the Constitution of the United States, or as seeking to alter the form of government of the United States by force, violence, or other unconstitutional means.

(3) An alien who belongs to any such organization on the date of its proscription shall have 3 months from such date to withdraw from the organization.

(4) A person who is naturalized after enactment of section 305 as thus amended and who within 5 years after such naturalization becomes a member of or affiliated with, any organization which would have precluded his naturalization under subsection (a) of section 305, as amended, shall be presumed to have obtained naturalization by fraud or by illegal procurement.

In view of the fact that sections 303 and 305 both relate to eligibility to naturalization and liberalization of section 303 necessitates the strengthening of 305, the conferees unanimously agreed that the conference report hereby submitted represents a germane modification of subjects in disagreement.

PAT MCCARRAN,
W. E. JENNER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

WHY WE ARE IN KOREA—TOKYO DISPATCH FROM RICHARD J. H. JOHNSTON

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] desires to attend the meeting of a conference committee, and I shall yield to him, and endeavor to get the floor at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I am almost certain that many Members of Congress will comment about a dispatch from Tokyo signed by Richard J. H. Johnston, published in yesterday's New York Times. Mr. Johnston's article, if true, puts the finger on a crucial weakness which not only seriously affects the morale of our Armed Forces in Korea, but also undermines the moral strength of our people at home in the world-wide battle for men's minds.

"The average GI," Mr. Johnson writes, "seems not to know why he is fighting in Korea." He quotes a 19-year-old corporal who says: "I keep asking myself what I am doing here. The funny thing is I can't answer my own question."

The nub of the dispatch is that the American soldiers now fighting and dying in Korea have not been prepared by the Army for the job they were called upon to do.

This is not a flash dispatch by an irresponsible reporter to an isolationist newspaper. Richard Johnston represents the New York Times, which printed the article. He spent 2 weeks with American troops at the front defense lines. He spoke to soldiers on the chow lines, in fox holes, aid stations, ambulances, and hospitals, and abroad trains, planes, and troop ships. And the conclusion he has reached is that the average GI believes that someone has put him into a mess he does not understand.

The GI cannot understand why, if this is a United Nations action, he has only South Koreans with him in the battle line. He cannot understand why he was so hastily thrust from soft garrison duty posts in the Pacific or from peaceful United States into the filth and violence of the Korean battlefields. He appears willing to fight for his country, but says "I'll be damned if I see why I'm fighting to save this hell hole."

Mr. President, if the nub of this article is true—if what I have quoted is really in the mind of the GI, and there are circumstances which give the color of truth to that assumption—then I submit we are truly in dark and dangerous waters.

I know that the administration's decision to defend South Korea was indeed a hasty flip-flop from the Acheson policy which wrote off China, Formosa, Korea, and almost all Asia in the year before the Korean aggression. That policy opened the door and spread the welcome mat for the Communists to move in those areas. I was against that policy of appeasement and surrender.

I agreed with the President, as did most of our people and the free world nations in the United Nations, when he reversed the Acheson policy and determined to stand against aggression in Korea. He realized, as we all realize, that not only was American security in the Pacific endangered, but that the very life of the United Nations hangs in the Korean balance. But what I want to condemn as bitterly as I know how is the failure of this administration to prepare our people and the boys who are sent to Korea for these undertakings.

At Cairo, Yalta, and Potsdam, we created an Asian vacuum and gave the Communists a springboard from which to jump in and fill it.

In the Truman doctrine on Greece and Turkey we indicated that we would resist Russian aggression anywhere. In the Marshall plan and the North Atlantic Treaty we expressed our desire to resist and to contain communism. Then island called Formosa and, now, the developments occurring in Korea.

I propose, Mr. President, certain decisions quite different from watching the dust settle.

I assume we all agree now, Mr. President, that the United States will regard the problem of China as unsolved so long as China is controlled by a Russian-dominated Communist dictatorship. I assume we agree that the United States will continue to help China break away from this dictatorship.

In view of the immediate military problem in the Far East, and of the enormity of the distance involved, I recognize that we cannot at this moment lay out a program for the liberation of the Chinese people. But in charting our long-range course for Asia, Mr. President, there is one policy on which we can reach a decision today. That is a decision, which I urge upon the Senate—that we avoid at all costs being maneuvered into a position where we look like foreign invaders attempting to subjugate an oriental people.

There is no question that in the Orient there is a new determination to end forever the various forms of inferiority imposed upon them historically by occidentals. The day when a foreign business executive or foreign government official could require his Asiatic clerks to kneel in his presence is—thank heaven—gone forever. The people of Asia will never accept a democracy which retains this element of servility. They will not buy a democracy imposed on them by foreigners on the foreigners' terms. They will resist a liberation which, whatever its motives, has either the appearance or substance of a foreign invasion.

The people of Asia do want our friendship and military help. I am sure that they have a special place in their hearts for the United States. Nevertheless, Mr. President, we must recognize that, at present, to orientals it appears that the only leadership in the attempt to oust the Communists from Asia is that of a foreign army of occidentals. If we do not recognize this reality, our well-meant intent to throw out the Communists will fail.

I should like to emphasize the significance of this point in our Korean operations. When the time comes for us to take the offensive in Korea, when we are ready to fight past our beachhead and drive the invaders back of the thirty-eighth parallel, are we going to have the people of South Korea fighting at our side and welcoming us as liberators? The answer to this one must be thought out carefully in setting our military course in Korea.

From Russia's maneuvers in the Security Council it is plain to see there is danger we cannot hold out much longer against seating Red China in the UN. We cannot, that is, unless we can point to the seat occupied by the Nationalists and say, "There is the delegation that represents the real interests of the Chinese people; that is the Government to which the Chinese people look for liberation."

It is inconceivable that we can successfully block the seating of the Communists if we let the Nationalist Government go out of existence.

I believe that our policy of opposition to Red China is phony unless it incorporates the corollary policy of bolstering the Nationalist Government. We must make that Government, whatever its faults, the rallying point for Chinese opposed to communism, at least during the first phase of China's come-back. We must direct our help to that objective. Otherwise, Russia will succeed once again in convincing many nations, and particularly Asiatic nations, that China's come-back is an American imperialist idea rather than the idea of the Chinese Nation.

Mr. President, the point I am making is that if China is to be liberated, the job must be shared by the people of China, under Chinese leadership. The job cannot be done, with political success, exclusively by an army of Occidentals. It cannot even be done by forces from Viet Nam or from Korea.

I am certain the majority of China's millions are not Communists, and that they will never become Communists. I feel confident that the grip of the Communist minority will start slipping when it becomes baffled by the feeding of China, let alone the job of establishing a healthy economy.

I am sure that, if the United States does not wait too long for the dust to settle, the majority of the Chinese people can be rallied to fight to expel the Communists, if they have American help, and the help of the nations in the anti-Communist alliance.

It is my conviction, therefore, Mr. President, that it is mandatory that a rallying point for the non-Communist Chinese should be offered. If the Communists are to be driven out of China there must be a nucleus for a military force that is aggressive, well led and capable of growth. But such leadership cannot be effective unless it is in close touch with the Chinese people and accepted as basically Chinese in outlook. No regime resulting from purely foreign intervention can withstand the propaganda attacks the Communists will use against it, or even win the allegiance of those Chinese who, while opposed to communism, want to select their own leaders and government.

All of these considerations, Mr. President, seem to make it imperative that General Chiang Kai-shek be enabled to regain his position as the leader of anti-Communist China. It is too early to say who the eventual leader will be who will preside over the eventual liberation of China. Quite probably that leader will emerge from the Chinese underground, possibly from the mainland, possibly from Formosa's ranks. When this leader does come forth, the United States should be ready to get behind him and do everything possible to help the redemption of China. In the meantime, we should support the one leader who is willing and able to get into the fight now.

I am not proposing that we should commit ourselves irrevocably to Chiang Kai-shek as the man to lead that movement permanently—far from it. But, on the other hand, we should not be so blind, or deliberately negligent, as to permit his position to deteriorate to the point where he will be completely discredited and impotent.

At this point, Mr. President, I would like to make very clear that I understand all possible interpretations of my proposal. I am well aware of the political thesis long followed by the gentlemen in the State Department. I understand thoroughly their argument that there were great abuses in China under General Chiang Kai-shek. I fully understand that, given the poverty of China's masses—reform, agrarian reform of some sort, would have been helpful. I am aware of the State Department's wish that there could have been some reforms.

But, Mr. President, I find it hard to be patient with that sublime innocence in the State Department which could confuse the need for agrarian reforms with the people who were trying to put them over. Those murderous political carpetbaggers who, having taken China, will only murder, and not introduce reforms. What sort of innocence is it that will let a burglar break down the door on his say so, that he is merely entering to repair a water faucet? What sort of doctrinaires are these in the State Department who, on seeing China's hunger, decided joyfully that the Chinese Communists could be trusted to come in with bread baskets instead of tanks?

Yes, Mr. President, I am quite familiar with the doctrine of those desk-bound intellectuals who got all mixed up, those gentlemen who would probably describe Al Capone as the product of an unhappy childhood, those gentlemen who saw a boil on China's neck and called in the executioner with his ax, thinking he was a surgeon.

So much for the doctrinaires.

Mr. President, we cannot escape blame for that tragedy. The white paper issued by our State Department is all the evidence necessary to establish that through intent or innocence, by our negative, unrealistic policies, we aided and abetted the defeats, political, and military, suffered by the Nationalist Government. Our policy makers did voice occasional gentle reproaches toward the invader's artillery, but they shrieked with horror at the idea that anyone contaminated by contact with the Nationalists was fit to breathe the air of China.

How stupid can a policy be? We were tearing down one leader and his government, and failed utterly in building up another. Does history offer no lesson? There is no such thing as a political vacuum, no matter how much our State Department officials may wish for one. Our policy of aloofness, of superiority, of moral indignation, succeeded only in sabotaging the Nationalist Government, in destroying the faith of many Chinese in their government, but did nothing to substitute another political force. We did nothing to fill the void, encouraged no other leader to rally the anti-Communists. Incredibly, our policy makers agreed that the vacuum should be filled by the Soviet puppets, with the inevitable result that China went behind the iron curtain.

Yes, we waited for the dust to settle, and as it settles we open our eyes to find GI's bogged down in the mud of Korea.

There can be no question that at this hour, the Generalissimo is the most powerful figure in the whole Asiatic resistance movement. Possibly the best proof of this fact is the priority given to him by the Communist radio in China, which, I am told, concentrates a constant and fierce propaganda against him. He is the leader of an army of half a million men on Formosa. He is acknowledged a large following all over the Chinese mainland.

I am quite ready to concede, as I have already indicated, that the Generalissimo may not be the man to start and finish the long campaign to redeem China. There can be no doubt that, under his leadership, the Chinese Nationalist government was driven out of China. I have no reason to deny that many segments of the Chinese National government were weak and corrupt. Mr. President, it is not a perfect world nor can we insist our military allies be cast in the mold of George Washington.

Nevertheless, anyone who examines the record of our Chinese policy, particularly as set forth in the so-called white paper issued by our State Department, incomplete and biased as that document may be, cannot avoid the conclusion that had we been trying deliberately to undermine and discredit Chiang Kai-shek's government, from the days of General Stilwell down to the Korean invasion, we could not have done a better job than was actually done.

I do not charge that our State Department deliberately undermined Chiang Kai-shek. What I do say is that by directing our policy toward fuzzy rather than concrete objectives, by being overwilling to buy the Red offer of agrarian reform made with the left hand, while they held a grenade in the right hand—by swallowing the Communists' own statements of their motives—we produced statesmanship at the level of the psychopathic ward. We failed to act when we should have acted, and we publicly rebuked when we should have remained silent. And, in the end, we wrecked the Chiang Kai-shek government.

Mr. President, had we decided 3 or even 2 years ago that it was against the interests of democratic states to allow the Communists to conquer China—had we used our money and ingenuity to back that objective, I believe we could have done the job without committing American soldiers to battle in China. I am sure that if we had set out deliberately to keep the Communists from taking China, our policy would have been reversed and the military events of this June 25 would not have occurred.

My plea today, Mr. President, is that we bear this unfortunate record in mind as we contemplate our course in the Far Eeast. I have no doubt that it is well within the power of the United States to make Chiang Kai-shek lose his present key position in the anti-Communist movement, and his remaining hold on the Chinese people. I maintain that we do not have to take conscious, deliberate action to cause this to happen. It will happen automatically if we do not give thought to what we are doing—if we do not see to it that our economic help, our military help and policy announcements—are aimed and timed so that the generalissimo is made to appear as an outsider, a meddler or an incompetent.

I urge, Mr. President, that the Chinese people need a leader to rally them against the Communists. As of today there is no one who shows promise of doing that job except Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. Let us not follow a policy that will prevent him from performing this task—if events of the next few months indicates that he is the man to do it.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Presiding Officer be kind enough to advise the Senator from South Carolina what the question before the Senate is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be laid aside while I accept an amendment which I feel certain is satisfactory all around, to be offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to laying aside the proposed modification of the Maybank amendment, the Barkley-Bates amendment, and taking up another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present an amendement and have it immediately considered, in view of the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has agreed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a following new section, as follows:

SEC. 717. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the creation of a Columbia Valley Administration or Columbia Valley Authority or any agency for the purpose of developing or administering the waters of the Columbia River or its tributaries.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, just a moment on that amendment. Does the Senator from South Carolina agree to it?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, it is my understanding, the understanding of the committee, and the understanding of the legislative counsel, that the section to which the Senator from Idaho refers was not intended to authorize the creation of a Columbia Valley Administration, a St. Lawrence Valley Administration, or any other valley administration.

Mr. LUCAS. I presume that is true as to all the valleys, but if we are to make an exception as to one, I presume we would have to as to all.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is why I made the statement that it was not intended to cover any of the valleys being suggested for reclamation, and the like.

Mr. LUCAS. I am going to object to the unanimous consent agreement to let this amendment go through, because I do not see any reason for it at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment may be submitted.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, having sat through all the hearings, I believe I know something about the bill, and I do not think it was ever the intention of the committee that under the bill the President could set up an authority such as the Columbia Valley Authority, or any other authority like the TVA.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was never intended.

Mr. CAPEHART. It was never intended, and I do not believe the President would do it, under the bill. However, one must admit that, if we stick strictly to the reading of the bill and the language itself, the President could do it: Since it never was the intention of the committee and never was discussed, and I am certain was not the intention of a single member of the committee, that the President should be given the authority to set up a valley authority, we might well accept the amendment. I see no harm in accepting it. It might well be a good thing to accept it. I would say that if we pass the bill without this amendment in it, and I found that the President had set up a valley authority, I certainly would have to say that he did something it was never the intention of the committee to authorize.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, what is the status of the amendment?

Mr. MAYBANK. The amendment will be printed and will lie on the table until tomorrow. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] objected to its consideration. I may say to the Senator from Idaho that I feel somewhat as does the Senator from Illinois. I think I stated to the Senator substantially what the Senator from Indiana has said, that it was never our intention to give the President the authority.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, as I stated in my conversation with the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I did not intend that the merit or lack of merit of the proposal should be discussed at this time, but in view of the fact that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works has a bill pending before his committee, and has given assurance that no consideration will be had until after hearings are held in the field, I thought it would serve a good purpose to clarify the atmosphere at this time so that there would be no misunderstanding.

Mr. MAYBANK. I believe the statements which have been made will clarify it. I have been in touch with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. There are a number of valley authority bills, and it was never the intention of the Committee on Banking and Currency to transgress on the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Works.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Idaho that so far as I personally know, the President has no intention of doing what the Senator is trying to prevent by his amendment. I believe that if we start denying the President power to do certain things, there will be no end to this kind of amendments, because all manner of implications might be drawn as to what the President might or might not do as a result of the power proposed to be given him. We have some confidence in the President when we grant the power proposed to be given, but I assure the Senator from Idaho that there will be no valley authorities started under this program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho withdraw his amendment temporarily?

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I want the amendment to lie on the table for consideration at the proper time.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency what machinery the executive branch of the Government has set up for the application of price control.

Mr. MAYBANK. The President did not ask for price control legislation. He asked for the legislation contained in titles V, VI, and VII.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from South Carolina does not know of any move having been made by the administration to set up machinery of that kind?

Mr. MAYBANK. No.

Mr. AIKEN. Am I correct in understanding that it would require possibly 3 or 4 months to get such machinery in shape to administer price controls?

Mr. MAYBANK. To the best of my knowledge no members of the committee discussed that subject. But as the Senator knows, provision is made for stand-by controls, so in case the situation should become worse the President could take action.

Mr. AIKEN. For several weeks I felt there should be stand-by legislation available in case the need came upon us suddenly.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what we tried to provide for.

Mr. AIKEN. But as I have listened to the discussion today I will have to admit that considerable uncertainty has crept into my thinking as to the advisability of forcing legislation upon an unwilling administration. It seems to me there should be some indication on the part of the administration that these controls are likely to be needed in the near future. Because it is quite apparent that legislation could be enacted in less time than the executive branch of the Government could set up machinery to apply such legislation I am still inclined to think that the controls should be ready.

Mr. MAYBANK. We cannot start any machinery, until we pass a bill under which the machinery can be set up. In committee several Senators reserved the right to vote against this section or the other section, but as the bill was finally drafted, and came out of the committee, after much study had been given to it, direction was given to conform more or less to the powers in World War I and in World War II, the WPB, OPA and Office of Economic Stabilization provisions.

Mr. AIKEN. It is contemplated by the provisions of the bill that each of the departments of the Government would enforce price controls on such items as fall generally in the category of each department?

Mr. MAYBANK. No. That is purely for the President to decide. An amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] today would throw most of such enforcement upon the Secretary of Commerce. I am going to discuss this with the Senator from Ohio later.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not think the burden should be thrown upon any one secretary.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me read the language of the bill in that connection in section 703:

> Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary—

And so forth. Then section 704 provides:

> The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act.

In other words, the President could create a new agency, or he could designate whomever he wanted. The only limitation lies in the matter of Senate confirmation.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I might be able to answer the Senator from Vermont. The bill specifically states that if and when the President imposes general price ceilings, rationing and wage controls, he must set up a separate organization to handle all three.

The bill specifically so prescribes.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the bill require him to apply all these controls at the same time? For instance, if he imposes price control is it obligatory that he impose wage controls also?

Mr. CAPEHART. I think it should be explained that there are two parts to the bill. One is the portion which the Committee considered for ten days, which is the portion of the bill the President asked for. That covers priorities, rationing, requisitioning and credit controls and the general provisions. Those provisions are to help win the Korean war and to rearm this nation. Then at the end of the executive sessions of the committee, titles IV and V were injected into the picture, which deal 100 percent with the general freeze of all prices, of wages and rationing. When the President imposes a general control on all prices, all wages, and all rationing, he must set up a separate administration. The administrator of that agency must handle all three of the controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is over-all control. The Senator will find language covering that on page 42, lines 9 to 13.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is why I have been advocating the elimination—at least I have been thinking that we would be better off if we were to eliminate titles IV and V, ask the administration to submit a new bill to cover those items, have the committee hold hearings, call in the persons who had to do with price control and rationing and wage controls in World War II, obtain the benefit of their thinking, write a new stand-by control bill, and hand it to the President.

Mr. AIKEN. It seems to me very essential if we enact legislation providing stand-by controls for the President to use, if necessary, that we make pretty sure that it is workable legislation.

Mr. CAPEHART. All that is done in this bill is to give him a blank check.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know whether we do that exactly.

Mr. CAPEHART. It is in titles IV and V.

Mr. AIKEN. It seems a little difficult to legislate on the floor of the Senate without benefit of the views of any member of the executive department by which an industry may be regulated. We have spent 2 or 3 hours this afternoon discussing one provision intended to protect one phase of one industry. It seems to me that if we approach the whole subject in the manner which the amendment now before us contemplates, and then if we do the same thing for a thousand industries, and perhaps a dozen phases for each industry, we might be a long time writing a bill on the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is my hope that the bill will be passed in substance as it was reported by the committee. I appreciate what the Senator from Vermont has said, that if we go into the individual items, and there are something more than 100,000 of them, we would get nowhere.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from South Carolina believe that the price-control provisions of the pending bill are sufficiently different from those passed by the House, so that when the bill goes to conference it would be legitimate and proper to write an entirely new provision which might be more workable, or possibly are they so different that they both could be dropped out?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Vermont has been a conferee on the part of the Senate in connection with many agricultural bills. It is oftentimes possible, in conference, to come out with a better bill than either the House or Senate bill which went to conference.

Of course I do not know how the Senate will finally decide; I do not know the form in which the bill will finally be passed by the Senate. As the matter stands today, the only appreciable difference between the House bill and the Senate bill is that the House has removed from its bill the separate provisions of section 402 (b) for selective controls above the retail level. However, I do not think there is any appreciable difference between the two Houses.

Mr. AIKEN. I still think it highly advisable to provide stand-by controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. I think so, too.

Mr. AIKEN. I would hate to have the bill which was finally passed by the Congress written in such a way that when the time came to apply such stand-by controls, the President would have to call upon Congress to provide them—thus making it appear that Congress had failed to act with intelligence.

Mr. CAPEHART. I think that is what would happen.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the committee has considered all the testimony and has had the benefit of the views and the experience of the OPA and of Mr. Symington and his group, and the committee also has had the benefit of the work, both day and night, by the legislative counsel, and so forth. The committee's bill provides all that the committee thinks it necessary to provide.

Mr. AIKEN. I am sure the Senator recalls, as I do, the weeks and months of debate on the floor of the Senate in connection with the preparation of the Price Control Act of 1942.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct, and I recall very well the work done in that connection on the floor of the Senate by former Senator Brown.

Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I understood earlier that we would not be able to reach a unanimous-consent agreement today in regard to voting on this measure, because the Republicans are to have a conference in the morning. However, I say to the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Nebraska that I hope that after that conference is held tomorrow, we shall be able to reach an agreement very soon, because this is a most important measure, on which a great deal of work has been done. The committee has worked on this measure long and hard.

Although there are some differences between Senators in regard to one or two sections of the bill, it is essential that we act on this bill this week. In the committee we often worked until quite late at night, sometimes until considerably after midnight.

So I hope an agreement may be entered into following the Republican policy committee's meeting.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to say that we will give full cooperation in regard to action on the bill and the final passage of the bill. However, I have counted the amendments, and I understand that there are approximately 29, if not more.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that there will be approximately 40 amendments in all.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, I do not know the number of amendments which finally will be called up, and I do not know how much discussion will be had in regard to each of them.

However, I wish to assure the distinguished acting majority leader that, so far as the minority are concerned, they will have no disposition to do anything other than to cooperate in every possible way in order to reach an early vote on the bill.

Nevertheless, in view of all the amendments which still are ahead of us, it seems a little difficult to arrange now for a time for the final vote on the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then, Mr. President, why do not we get busy tomorrow and begin to vote on the amendments?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I hope to have the Senate do, and to remain in session tomorrow night, if necessary.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, at the minority conference meeting tomorrow I shall recommend, so far as I personally am concerned, that we get on with the business before the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. And let us have a night session, if necessary, just as in the committee we often met at night.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, what is the harm of continuing now, for it is only 4:20 p. m. Let us continue now, instead of waiting until tomorrow to act on the amendments.

If Senators will stop talking and will let the Senate begin to take action on the amendments, certainly we can act on some of the amendments this afternoon.

AMENDMENT OF DOMESTIC TIN-SMELTING INDUSTRY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on Senate bill 2666, to extend for 5 years the authority to provide for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The report was read, as follows:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3666) to extend for five years the authority to provide for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its amendment.
> LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
> LESTER C. HUNT,
> Managers on the Part of the Senate.
> BRENT SPENCE,
> PAUL BROWN,
> WRIGHT PATMAN,
> MIKE MONRONEY,
> JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
> RALPH A. GAMBLE,
> Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the report, but I should like to ask a question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, as the bill was passed by the Senate, it would extend for 5 years the authority to operate the tin smelter. When the bill was considered by the House, the House added an amendment. Subsequently a conference was had, and at the conference the Senate conferees prevailed upon the House conferees to delete the amendment made by the House and to accept the bill as passed by the Senate.

So the conference report is in exactly the same form as the bill which was passed by the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish to know what happened just a moment ago in regard to the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no objection to approval of the report, and it was agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. Perhaps I shall wish to object, if I can find out what is going on. A moment ago a conference report was adopted while I was out of the Chamber, although if I had been in the Chamber at the time I certainly would not have agreed to approval of the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator is happy that this particular conference report has been agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from Texas submitted it, I am sure the report is all right. Nevertheless I should like to know about it, for I might wish to move to reconsider.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the RFC has operated a tin smelter. Its authority to do so has expired, and the RFC has requested authority to continue that operation for 5 years. The Senate passed the bill on the call of the unanimous-consent calendar. Subsequently, the House considered the bill, and voted to add an amendment to it; and the measure went to conference.

In the conference the Senate conferees prevailed upon the House conferees to recede from the amendment.

The conference report has been submitted in the form of the bill as it was originally passed by the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Then I have no objection to the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement explanatory of the conference report.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF TEXAS

Tin is a vitally essential metal to the United States in time of peace and in time of war. No military operation can succeed without tin, and the domestic economy cannot function satisfactorily without tin.

Unfortunately, in terms of tin supply the United States is a have-not nation. Decades of exploration have failed to uncover tin deposits within the United States adequate for even a few days demand annually. As a result, the United States, which consumes as much tin annually as the rest of the world combined, must rely upon foreign sources for virtually all of our tin supply.

Prior to World War II, we recognized the obvious danger that enemy action might cut off the supply of tin concentrates and even destroy the tin-smelting capacity of Europe, which was then our sole source of refined tin. To correct this situation, the Government built the Longhorn tin smelter, which is our only tin smelter.

The Longhorn smelter is especially equipped to treat Bolivian ores since, in time of global war, access to these ores is less likely to be nullified by enemy action. However, the Longhorn smelter can treat any ores in the world.

We must keep in mind, however, that the bulk of world tin production is in southeast Asia. Already Communist-inspired forces are active there. Our supply of tin from that area is plainly in great danger; this danger is not offset or minimized by the possible availability of Bolivian ores. We must recognize that the situation which caused us to build the Longhorn smelter 10 years ago is now again duplicated in the course of international events. The enemy is new, the threat is old.

To meet this threat, we must do two things:

1. Immediately pass this legislation so that our one and only major tin-smelting operation can be brought to maximum production rapidly without loss through contractng delays of our overseas tin concentrates supply.

2. Move with the greatest speed to secure from the Far East as much tin as possible while there is still time to build our tin stockpile.

We need all the tin we can get at home and abroad. We do not have enough now. Our stockpile is not in good shape. Our output it not nearly what it should be.

Beyond that, there is still another important consideration which makes enactment of this legislation important. The Longhorn tin smelter is a weapon of war—as surely as a gun or tank or ship or plane is a weapon. There is not any justification for letting this fine weapon fall into disuse; there is no justification for hampering its efficiency and effectiveness through unnecessary delay.

Congress has acted wisely in deterring the sale of war plants during the past 4 years. For example, during the past two sessions—the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses—both Houses have refused to dispose of our vital rubber plants. Events have proved the wisdom of the congressional position; we are using nearly all the rubber plants we still own—and we may need more.

Less than 90 days ago, committees in both Houses were told that the tin smelter should be closed down—that it was no longer needed. We were told the same thing about our rubber plants. It would be unthinkable for Congress now to heed the counsel of those whose lack of judgment, lack of vision, and lack of information has been indicted already by the course of world events.

Time is running out. Let's not jeopardize our national security longer. Let's pass this badly needed legislation now.

As part of my statement, I wish to include a more detailed memorandum citing the uses of tin, the demand for tin, the supply of tin, and some of the factors which make continuation of our one tin-smelting operation essential now.

MEMORANDUM ON THE IMPORTANCE OF AN ADEQUATE SUPPLY OF TIN TO OUR NATIONAL SECURITY AND THE NEED FOR THE CONTINUED OPERATION OF THE LONGHORN SMELTER

USES OF TIN

Tin is a vitally essential metal in time of peace or war. In wartime it provides the coating of tin on the sheet steel used to can the food used by the armed services; it makes solder for countless billions of electrical connections for radio, radar, transport and power equipment; it makes the babbitt metal for bearings for machine tools, transportation equipment and other purposes; it is a constituent of bronze used in huge tonnages by the Navy and the Army. Even in wartime, with conservation and substitution, there is a substantial civilian requirement for tin for foodstuffs, for maintenance, repair and operation of industrial equipment, for type metal for printing, for retinning the farmers' milk cans and a host of other uses. The United States consumes approximately as much tin each year as is consumed by all the other countries of the world combined.

WORLD SUPPLIES

Our entire requirements (with the exception of less than 50 tons a year, mostly from Alaska) are derived from distant overseas areas such as Bolivia, Belgian Congo, Indonesia, Thailand, and Malaya. Access to certain of these areas may be cut off by enemy action, and as in World War II, we may be dependent upon part of the Bolivian production (approximately half goes to the United Kingdom) and on the Belgian Congo. These sources are inadequate to supply our needs, hence the necessity for a stockpile of tin.

The smelters in the Far East treat high-grade alluvial tin concentrates. This is a relatively simple process and high output can be attained with a minimum of equipment. The big British and Dutch smelters process medium-grade complex ores as well as high-grade alluvials. Texas City is equipped to handle all grades of concentrates and possesses in addition to the usual smelting and refining equipment extensive facilities for pretreatment such as roasting and leaching and has even concentrated some of the receipts. It can produce from 45,000 to 90,000 long tons of pig tin a year depending upon the grade and complexity of the material treated. Its facilities are unrivalled for the processing of tin concentrates from all parts of the world.

THE NECESSITY FOR CONTINUING OPERATIONS AT TEXAS CITY

Since the war, rehabilitation has been slow in Malaya and Thailand and almost nonexistent in Burma, French Indochina, and China. Excellent progress has been achieved by the Dutch in Indonesia. In Nigeria, Belgian Congo, and Bolivia there was no war destruction but wartime operations were at such a high rate that development work necessarily fell behind and in the postwar period their production has been less than during the war, even with higher tin prices.

The shortage of tin in the postwar period was acute until 1949 when restrictions over its use in the United States were lifted. Although the supply is increasing it is still inadequate to meet world industrial needs plus the United States stockpiling program.

We again may be faced with the loss of pig tin from Malayan smelters should a major war break out. Bolivian tin concentrate production before the war was shipped to the United Kingdom and the European Continent for smelting. The resultant pig tin was sold abroad as its quality was not suitable for large scale use in the United States. Should European smelters be damaged, it might be necessary to treat all of the Bolivian and other production in the United States.

The Texas City smelter pays its operating costs out of its smelting charges, penalties, and deductions so that its operation is no charge against the taxpayer. The original capital cost or any bookkeeping entries for depreciation are a proper charge against national security.

SHUT-DOWN PROPOSALS AND COSTS

It has been suggested by certain interests that the plant be closed and maintained on a stand-by basis and that we purchase all of our pig tin from foreign sources, except for a minor amount produced from detinning operations and possibly from an experimental smelting unit now in operation. This proposal ignores our national security and would place a totally unnecessary burden on the taxpayer.

This year a waste acid plant was put in operation to reclaim currently used acid and retreat 80 acres of acid in ponds adjacent to the plant. This acid plant will have to operate until all acid is reclaimed, whether or not the smelter operates. This will take some years to accomplish. The RFC estimated that a shutdown of 2 years and then a reopening of the plant would cost the taxpayer $3,280,000 which included operation of the acid plant during the shutdown.

More important than the unnecessary cost would be the dispersion of the technical staff and skilled workers which has taken so long to build up and train. The closing of the smelter would divert Bolivian, Indonesian, Thailand and other tin concentrates to foreign smelters. These new contractural obligations with foreign smelters might take time or considerable cost to modify. Our smelter stocks of tin concentrates would be exhausted, whereas an operating enterprise of necessity maintains a considerable tonnage which constitutes an additional form of stockpiling. Untreated stocks of concentrates thus diverted to foreign smelters might to lost by enemy action. For these and many other reasons, our national security will best be served by a continuation of tin smelting at Texas City.

When the prospects of peace were brighter the Congress authorized the continuation of the operation for a further period of 2 years. The smelter has been in steady operation for more than 8 years and has produced approximately half a billion dollars worth of pig tin. Its operations have been handicapped, however, by the short duration of each authorization. Contracts for only short periods could be negotiated for tin concentrates. Trained technical staff and skilled workers were hard to attract due to the limited time of operations under each authorization. Changes in plant or process could not be made on any substantial scale even though they gave every evidence of lowering costs because the costs could not be entirely liquidated in the short period.

Under the present bill, authorizing a permissive operation for a 5-year period better concentrate contracts can be entered into, the labor situation will be more stable, operations can be still further improved and costs reduced in an orderly, well-planned program. The proposed legislation has been under careful consideration for a lengthy period, and has the approval of all directly concerned agencies of government as well as the overwhelming majority of domestic tin consumers.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN IMMIGRANTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, conference reports are adopted from time to time, although often the reports are entirely different from the bills as they were passed by the Senate. I think it would be rather a good practice, regardless of the nature of the conference report, to have quorum calls had before conference reports are agreed to.

I now enter a motion that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the Senate earlier today agreed to the conference report on House Joint Resolution 238, to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence. I was not present when the conference report was submitted, and I wish to have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. President, I do not say that I am going to object tomorrow to the conference report, but I should like to have an opportunity to study it, because the report is contrary to the measure I introduced. In the report apparently three or four pages of additional language have been added, making the form of the joint resolution entirely different from what it was when it was passed by the Senate. Therefore, I should like to examine the conference report before it is finally adopted; and I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the conference report on House Joint Resolution 238 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Kent, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1838) to amend title 28 of the United States Code relating to fees of United States marshals, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HOBBS, Mr. RODINO, and Mr. MCCULLOCH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3921) to provide for the temporary appointment of referees in bankruptcy, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HOBBS, Mr. REED of Illinois, and Mr. WILSON of Texas were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina as amended.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as amended, I offer the following amendment:

At the end of the amendment insert the following: "No ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit to those industries or groups affected."

Mr. President, I do not see how anyone can object to my amendment. It provides exactly for the sort of operations which should be conducted, and which I think will be conducted, under the OPA which may come about as a result of enactment of this measure.

My amendment merely provides that no ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit to those affected.

Mr. President, if we adopt the amendment we are not guaranteeing anyone a profit, but we are simply calling for a gross margin of profit to the industries or groups affected.

The amendment does not apply to individual retailers or wholesalers, but it does apply to industries and groups. In other words, the amendment will do for all groups of industries in the United States exactly what will be done for the packing industry by the amendment to which we have just agreed.

I cannot see any objection to my amendment, and I think its adoption is most important.

Senators may remember that in 1946, when the original OPA Act was extended, long hearings were held, considerable debate took place in the Senate, and, finally, we worked out a formula which was based on 1940 profits, plus increases in costs, and so forth and so on.

My amendment will do that, I think, and will result in adjusted and equitable treatment for everyone concerned.

I think we should add this amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as amended, and should take my amendment to conference. If in conference or on the floor of the Senate anyone can show me that my amendment is not fair, just, and equitable, or if anyone can show me that my amendment is unworkable, I shall be perfectly willing to withdraw it.

However, if I were appointed tomorrow to be OPA Director—and I make this statement on the basis of my experience of many years in business—the basis provided by the amendment would be exactly that on which I would set up an OPA; the amendment provides the means by which I would wish to arrive at a ceiling.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is the Senator's amendment to my amendment to apply at the retail level?

Mr. CAPEHART. No; it calls for a reasonable gross margin of profit to the industries or groups affected.

Mr. MAYBANK. As the Senator knows, I talked to the legislative counsel about this matter this morning and he has talked to those who perhaps know something about the operations of OPA beginning with 1942. We have considered no such amendment as that of the Senator from Indiana. The amendment we have adopted is the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana would affect hundreds of thousands of items, and could not be worked.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, let me show how the amendment would work and how the Administrator would handle it. In setting a price for the manufacturer or processor, he would take into consideration the amount of discount that the dealer or retailer was to receive, indeed, he would be forced under this amendment to do that. He would have to permit the manufacturer or processor to establish a price which would permit a legitimate, reasonable, gross margin of profit to the retailer and likewise to the wholesaler.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does that mean that regardless of who he was or what business he was in, he would get a reasonable profit?

Mr. CAPEHART. No.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator desire to guarantee inefficiency?

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator from Illinois is missing the point entirely. The amendment provides for a reasonable gross margin of profit. There is nothing in it about net profit. It refers to gross margin of profit. For example, assume that a retailer pays X amount for something, and that he sells it for Y amount: the difference between what he pays for it and what he receives for it is the gross profit. That margin may be enough to show a profit, or it may likewise show a loss.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an observation, I may say, for whatever it may be worth, that, with all due deference to all members of the committee, I can readily see where we are getting. We adopted an amendment awhile ago which I do not think should have been adopted.

Mr. CAPEHART. I disagree. I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. Probably the Senate will adopt this amendment. Neither of them was considered by the committee, I understand. There will be other amendments, and the first thing we know, we shall have another bill, and it will have to be debated and recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency in order to find out exactly what it means.

Mr. CAPEHART. Let me say that the title we are talking about, under which this amendment comes, is title IV, which the Senate Banking and Currency Committee did not consider. It never considered that title, it never held any hearings on it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I may say that we considered the title time and time again. We had executive hearings. The general hearings covered title IV. For instance, we asked Mr. Sawyer how things would be affected, and Mr. Baruch's testimony certainly was directed to title IV.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. Baruch dealt in generalities.

Mr. MAYBANK. We took his generalities and every other generality and put them into specific language.

Mr. CAPEHART. The entire hearings on this subject consisted of generalities, as the Senator will have to admit. I am not complaining about that, but merely stating that I know in my own mind that this is a good amendment, and I think it should be in the bill. It would take only about a second to adopt it. Let me say that I presume I shall be on the conference committee, since I am the second ranking minority member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and if this amendment is taken to conference and, between now and then, someone can show me that it is unworkable or that it is not fair, I shall be the first to want it withdrawn, the first to come to the floor and tell the Senate that I have made a mistake in asking for it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I trust the Senator will not feel that I am presumptuous, and if he does not want to answer, he may decline to do so. I understood the Senator voted against the title in the committee, did he not?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Was it the Senator's intention not to favor it on the floor?

Mr. CAPEHART. I have an amendment lying on the desk to be offered from the floor. I am not certain whether I shall favor it, or not; it will depend on what happens to the bill otherwise.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the thought—to offer an amendment to the bill, here, and so forth and so on, and then move to strike out title IV of the bill. So what is the use discussing it? Why not get down to title IV and determine whether it is to remain in the bill, and, if it needs perfecting, to perfect it?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am willing to have the group of Senators now present, about half a dozen, vote on the amendment, without suggesting the absence of a quorum, if they want to do that.

Mr. MAYBANK. I cannot assume any such responsibility as that.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator is going to have trouble with this bill in the future, unless some such amendment to it is adopted, or unless the Administrator of OPA, if and when it comes, adopts the program we are trying to write into this bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am not questioning the merits of the Senator's suggestion. The Senator and I have worked together for a long time on this matter, and in adopting the amendment, inserting title IV, we did only——

Mr. CAPEHART. Why did the Senator accept the amendment regarding meat?

Mr. MAYBANK. Because the amendment, as I have tried all day long to say, was agreed to 4 years ago by Senator BARKLEY and Representative Bates. It was provided under OPA. I read the statements. This has never been studied.

Mr. CAPEHART. May I say to the able Senator from South Carolina that in 1945 or 1946 we wrote a program into the OPA bill, telling the Administrator how to arrive at ceiling prices. It was based upon 1940 profits plus an increase in cost.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that.

Mr. CAPEHART. All we are doing here is talking about a very simple amendment which is, I think, fair and just.

Mr. MAYBANK. It would affect 100,000 articles at least, would it not?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes; but it would affect them as to groups and industries.

Mr. MAYBANK. It would affect every group and every industry in the United States.

Mr. CAPEHART. Of course, OPA itself affected every industry in the United States, and it affected every individual. If the Senator is thinking that the Administrator must set a ceiling on a million items—and there are more than a million in the United States—that is not true. He does it by groups. He does it by industries. We say to him that no ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit. Thousands of industries are affected.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish the Senator had offered his amendment in committee, so that we might have had some hearings on it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I becoming a little disgruntled, when the able Senator from South Carolina keeps trying to intimidate to the Senate that we held hearings on title IV. We did not.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, it was certainly my understanding that the witnesses testified on title IV as well as on titles I, II, and III.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield to the table Senator from New York.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like first to finish my statement. The Senator should read the hearings. The hearings in open session have been printed. He will find references to title IV throughout.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield to the able Senator from New York.

Mr. LEHMAN. It seems to me that the Senator from Indiana has referred to his amendment as a simple little amendment. It is simple in its language, but I think it would complicate matters to such an extent that the bill would become entirely unworkable. We do not guarantee profits in normal times. The amendment would require that in every industry, in order to permit or to assure a so-called adequate gross profit, there would have to be hearings, there would have to be the most intensive study. It would take weeks, if not months, to do what would be necessary.

Personally I am very sorry indeed that the very able chairman of the committee accepted the amendment relating to meat products. I think it is going to involve a very great complication and will prevent protection of the people on the one thing on which I believe they require protection. But amendment would carry the same principle through the entire gamut of production, and I think would make the bill entirely unworkable.

Mr. CAPEHART. Let me ask the Senator a few questions now that I have the floor.

Mr. LEHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does the Senator believe that the OPA Administrator should in every instance set a price that will enable those dealing in a particular piece of merchandise to make a fair margin of profit?

Mr. LEHMAN. I know from my own experience as a merchant and a manufacturer——

Mr. CAPEHART. It would be very simple to answer my question "yes" or "no." Does the Senator think that the OPA Administrator, in setting a price, should permit a fair, reasonable, gross margin of profit?

Mr. LEHMAN. I do not think it is possible to assure a reasonable gross profit to every manufacturer and every merchant. I think it is impossible to do that.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not think the Senator has read my amendment.

Mr. LEHMAN. I listened to it when it was being read.

Mr. CAPEHART. It provides for a reasonable gross margin of profit. That is what we must keep in mind—not a gross profit, but a reasonable gross margin of profit. What does that mean? Let us take the automobile industry. When the Price Administrator sets a price on automobiles, he must give the manufacturer a sufficient price to enable him to give the dealer a reasonable gross margin of profit.

Mr. LEHMAN. And also the retailer.

Mr. CAPEHART. The automobile dealer is a retailer.

Mr. LEHMAN. The Senator's amendment would cover the entire catalog of manufactured articles.

Mr. CAPEHART. What I have indicated is all there is to my amendment. It simply says to the OPA Administrator, "When you set a price for the manufacturer or the processor, you must set it high enough so that it will provide for every retailer and wholesaler in the United States who handles that group of manufactured goods a reasonable gross margin of profit."

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. In order to do what the Senator proposes it would mean that a study woud have to be made of the costs of every manufacturer.

Mr. CAPEHART. No; it would not require that. How would the price administrator set prices?

Mr. LEHMAN. I think he would set prices in an industry on certain facts based on an average cost and an average selling price.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is exactly what he would do under this amendment; but in doing it he would not dare to set a ceiling which would not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit.

Mr. LEHMAN. In an industry.

Mr. CAPEHART. For the retailers and wholesalers in the industry.

Mr. LEHMAN. There is certainly a great difference between the costs of different manufacturers in the same industry, and there is a great difference in the costs of operation on the part of retailers.

Mr. CAPEHART. I agree with the able Senator; but that is a problem which the director will face under any formula he may establish. Under the pending bill the President, if he wanted to—I am sure he would not—could set a ceiling price which would absolutely deny anyone in America a margin of profit, let alone a net profit. My amendment provides that no ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit to the industries or groups affected.

That is the least we can do.

Mr. LEHMAN. I think we can fix a price which would cover the average cost of producing an article and the average cost of selling it. But if we are going to try to fix a price which will allow a margin for every producer, when the costs of production inevitably vary very greatly——

Mr. CAPEHART. We do not have that problem at all, under this amendment. Is it not the Senator's understanding that whoever is the administrator of the next OPA, in fixing ceiling prices, will make an effort to permit the price to be such that everyone dealing in a given commodity will make a gross profit?

Mr. LEHMAN. I do not think we can ever guarantee that everyone in an industry will make a profit.

Mr. CAPEHART. I did not say that. I am talking about the gross margin of profit. The able Senator from New York is a businessman, and he knows there is a margin of profit. That margin of profit is the difference between what something costs and what it is sold for. All I am asking is that in setting ceiling prices the President give consideration to making certain that the manufacturer or processor has a reasonable margin of profit, that the retailer has a reasonable margin of profit, and that the wholesaler has a reasonable margin of profit. We are not guaranteeing them a profit; we are not even thinking in terms of guaranteeing them a profit; we are simply saying, "Your first consideration must be that in establishing ceiling prices there be a sufficient margin of profit for the average dealer, wholesaler, or manufacturer in an industry to operate on."

Mr. LEHMAN. Even in normal times there cannot be any uniformity in the margin of profit on articles produced in the same industry by different manufacturers.

Mr. CAPEHART. Will the able Senator from New York tell the Senate how the OPA Administrator is going to establish ceiling prices under the bill as it is written?

Mr. LEHMAN. I think he will have to set an average price for an article, a staple article, let us say, which will give a sufficient margin of profit to the average producer. But he cannot do that in the case of all producers. That cannot be done in normal times, and it certainly cannot be done in abnormal times.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator has ably described my amendment. The only difference is that I suggest that we write it into the bill. It is not now in the bill.

Mr. LEHMAN. The Senator's amendment, as I listened to it, provides that there shall be an adequate margin of profit for every manufacturer on every article that is manufactured.

Mr. CAPEHART. It simply provides as follows:

No ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit to those industries or groups affected.

The Administrator will do exactly what the Senator described a while ago, excepting that the Congress of the United States is directing him to take into consideration a reasonable gross margin of profit.

Under the bill as it is written, the administrator could establish every price in the United States—I am not saying he would do so—on such a basis that no one would make a profit.

Mr. LEHMAN. I maintain that there is no possibility of an administrator fixing a price which will provide a reasonable margin of profit for every man who is producing commodities or manufacturing articles.

Mr. CAPEHART. It is done by industries or groups. That is exactly the way it is now done.

Mr. LEHMAN. I did not interpret the Senator's amendment that way.

Mr. CAPEHART. Let me read it again:

No ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit to those industries or groups affected.

Mr. LEHMAN. That would cover everyone in the industry.

Mr. CAPEHART. We have to do that if we are going to put price ceilings on everything.

Mr. LEHMAN. We cannot provide a reasonable margin of profit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has two amendments which are acceptable. Let me say that we called a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency for 5 o'clock this afternoon, at the request of some members of the committee. In view of the fact that is the desire of the majority leader to proceed, I have sent word to the committee to tell those who are there to be kind enough to wait until the Senate takes a recess. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio is at the committee.

In the meantime, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 44, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "average price received by producers on June 15, 1950" and insert in lieu thereof "price received by producers during the period from May 24 to June 24, 1950, inclusive." inclusive."

Mr. MAYBANK. The amendment would conform the period of time to the period used by the House.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, last week when I spoke on the pending bill I telephoned to Mr. Hoover to obtain his opinion on the question of controls. He had been the Food Administrator during the First World War, and he was very familiar with controls during the Second World War. Therefore I thought since we had had Mr. Baruch's opinion stated before the committee, and because Mr. Hoover had not been called, we should have his opinion as well. I should like to read the letter which I received from Mr. Hoover.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wanted to say to the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. TAFT. The letter is very short.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wished to say that we were asked to have Mr. Baruch and others appear before the committee. If we had been asked to have Mr. Hoover before the committee, we would have asked him to come before us.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that it was not an intentional omission, and I did not even mean to imply any such thing. The letter reads:

THE WALDORF ASTORIA TOWERS,
New York, N. Y., August 13, 1950.

The Honorable ROBERT A. TAFT,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your request for my views on the economic control legislation.

The whole subject needs a common-sense inquiry into each segment of our economy.

We are in the midst of a minor war and in the presence of a preparedness program for a dangerous general war. The Korea problem, with its requirements of two or three hundred thousand men and their arms, can be carried by our economy with scarcely a ripple. It requires but minor controls. Our primary problem is controls necessitated by the preparedness stage.

INFLATION CONTROLS

The first segment of controls is inflation pressures on prices. Certain indirect controls are needed at once: (a) prohibition of hoarding and excessive inventories; (b) drastic limitations on installment credit; (c) increase of excise taxes on nonessentials so as to discourage unnecessary buying; (d) radical decrease in certain areas of Government expenditures.

In the Federal expenditures field, if we exclude the expenditures on armed services, the debt, veterans, and social security, the costs of the other Government branches have increased by over $15,000,000,000 in 12 years. Certainly seven or eight billions of this could be stopped or postponed. Senator BYRD has pointed out that $5,000,000,000 could be saved from the increases in the last 2 years alone. The reorganization commission for reform of further executive agencies could be made to contribute to this.

PROCESSING AND COMMODITY CONTROLS

The second segment of controls in our economy is that of wages, prices, and rationing of commodities and manufacturing capacity should be approached very gingerly. All such controls tend to slacken the national effort. An examination of different parts of our commodity and processing economy will show wide differences in the necessity of controls.

The pressures of preparedness program will require some controls of materials and manufacturing which are a military necessity. Some materials will need to be allocated or priorities given. The manufacture of some gadgets will need be restricted to make way for guns. Prices will need be determined.

Fortunately in the manufacturing and transportation line, our capacity is immensely greater than at the time of Pearl Harbor. It has increased much faster than the population. Our available supplies of most raw materials of military necessity are also greater. Our steel production alone has increased about 22,000,000 tons per annum. With our host of Second World War ships, we will need much less teel. We have our synthetic rubber production. Scarcity pressure in rubber could be somewhat relieved if we put all our plants into operation. Some of the manufactures and some commodities could be controlled by cooperation with industrial managers and labor. Nevertheless, some authority is needed in these fields.

In the food and clothing segment of the economy, there is much less need of controls. We are overproducing food all along the line, and if necessary, we could still further increase production. The proof of abundance is the constant Government buying of surpluses and dumping some of the abroad at absurd prices. The Government could lower food prices at any moment it wished to. We have little shortage of clothing materials. Preparedness for the larger danger would require putting civilians in uniform, but that would not increase demands for such supplies very much in proportion to our production.

We have plenty of furniture.

We have ample resources available in oil and coal supplies for the preparedness phase.

The hoarders in these lines will sometime come to the end of their hysterical buying spree and with the slump in buying they will find lower prices.

In my view there is no occasion and much danger in all-embracing price, wage, rationing controls at the present time. Aside from their slackening effects, the surrender of freedom is hard to recover even when the controls are proved unnecessary. If experience is of any importance, it points to the fact that bureaucracy loves power and always finds excuses to use any authority given to it. Authority for some controls is required, but those controls should involve only special fractions of our economy.

The Congress should reserve the authority to act later on upon some segments. It can always act on a few days' notice.

Our greatest domestic danger at this time is shock hysteria in the public, which leads the Congress to unnecessary surrenders of freedom.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 43, line 24, after the word "subsection", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following: "but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials processed from raw materials, and particularly from agricultural commodities, in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have two amendments before me which the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] said he was very anxious to have considered by the Senate. He may have gone to the committee meeting, and I have sent to see if he is there. I do not know whether it would be proper for me to offer the amendments.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 62, it is proposed to strike out line 20 down to and including line 13, on page 63.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, the amendment would delete the paragraph which starts on page 62 at line 20 and runs to line 13 on page 63. The paragraph gives a definition of the word "credit."

The intention of the committee was to control consumer credit exactly as we controlled consumer credit during World War II under what was known as Regulation W. That is provided for in the bill. It was the intention of the committee to control real-estate construction credit as affecting new construction and major renovations. I do not understand how the definition of credit got into the bill, because I do not believe the committee ever passed on it.

Mr. MAYBANK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator's amendment delete the same section which the House deleted?

Mr. CAPEHART. No.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understood the Senator was offering an amendment to delete a section in the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. It would delete the paragraph beginning at page 62, line 20, and going over to line 13 on page 63.

Mr. MAYBANK. In substance, is that the same section which was covered by an amendment introduced in the House?

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know.

Mr. MAYBANK. The amendment would delete a certain portion of the bill. Does the Senator refer to the same portion?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am not certain. What I am trying to eliminate is the definition of credit. If I understand correctly the unusual language, it would give the President of the United States power to control all credit. It reads:

(2) "Credit" means any loan, mortgage, deed of trust, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery.

It never was the intention of the committee to write that into the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct, so far as I know.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know how it got into the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I remember, this is supposed to be the definition of credit for the purpose of regulating real-estate construction or reconstruction.

Mr. CAPEHART. There is a definition of real-estate construction credit just above that.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct, but it was the purpose to provide a definition. I am wondering how we can arrange it so that it will be understood it is to apply to real estate.

Mr. CAPEHART. On page 62, at the top of the page, it says, "Real-estate construction credit," and proceeds to describe what we mean by that. Why is a definition of "credit" put in the bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. It is really tied up with the definition in the first paragraph.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then it would much better to say so.

Mr. MAYBANK. I think so.

Mr. CAPEHART. If I want to lend the Senator $10, and he is going to pay me back in three payments, under this provision I would have to get permission of the President to lend him the money.

Mr. MAYBANK. The legislative counsel advises me he does not construe it that way. It was only to define credit as it applied to real estate. On page 59 the language is:

To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the Board is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real-estate construction credit—

And so forth. On page 62 there appears a definition of real-estate construction credit, and that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I call the attention of the Senator to subparagraph (d) on page 61. That is where the section relating to definitions starts. It says, "For the purposes of this section," the following terms shall have the following meanings. That relates to section 602 only, and the only kind of credit which is provided for, that is to be controlled under section 602, is real-estate construction credit. However, in discussing real-estate construction credit in section 602, subdivisions (a), (b), and (c), the term "credit" is used many times without being connected with the words "real-estate construction." Therefore, it becomes necessary on page 62, in setting out the definition, to give a definition of real-estate construction credit, which is one term by itself, and then to supplement that with a definition of credit. But both definitions relate only to section 602, which pertains only to the kind of real-estate construction credit which the Federal Reserve Board has the right to regulate. It does not in any way relate to section 601, which is the section which controls consumer credit generally.

Mr. CAPEHART. Why is it necessary to have it in the bill at all?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wish very much that the two definitions could have been combined in some way, but the legislative counsel, on whose shoulders falls the task of drafting these measures so they will be properly defined, felt it was necessary to include both definitions. The Federal Reserve Board likewise asked that both definitions be fully set forth in exactly the way they are set forth.

If the Senator will refer to the controlling words on the bottom of page 61, he will find that they tie the definition very definitely to section 602, in a way no one could dispute.

Mr. CAPEHART. I have only one desire in the matter, and that is to make certain that the credit referred to in this title applies only to real-estate construction. After having made the record which we have made on the floor of the Senate, that it applies only to real-estate construction, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator's assumption is exactly correct. Both the chairman and I have been advised by the legislative counsel to that effect.

Mr. CAPEHART. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, it may be very clear to the Senator from Indiana, but the discussion which has just taken place is as clear as mud to the Senator from Oregon.

There has been some discussion about regulation W. What has regulation W to do with section 602?

Mr. CAPEHART. It has not anything to do with it.

Mr. MAYBANK. It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Regulation W is described only in section 601.

Mr. MAYBANK. That relates to consumer credit.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I believe I was the one who brought the question of consumer credit into the discussion. I did it in this way, if the Senator from Oregon will remember. I said that the definition of the word "credit," as shown on page 62, related only to credit under section 602, which is the credit that is connected with new construction or reconstruction, real-estate credit.

I further stated that it had no connection with the type of credit which the Federal Reserve Board was authorized to regulate under section 601. I think I referred to it as "Regulation W" credit. That is what section 601 relates to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Section 601 relates to consumer credit, under the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. CAPEHART. I may say to the able Senator from Oregon that we have to refer to Executive Order 8843, of August 9, 1941, which gives the exact terms and the meanings of the so-called regulation W.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I have said, that relates to consumer credit.

Mr. CAPEHART. This is exactly as it was handled during World War II.

Mr. MORSE. We are not changing it?

Mr. CAPEHART. We are not changing it.

Mr. MAYBANK. We are not changing it at all.

Mr. MORSE. If I can get assurance that regulation W——

Mr. MAYBANK. We give the Federal Reserve Board the same powers to control all consumer credit that they had in World War II.

Mr. MORSE. I think that is essential.

Mr. MAYBANK. The other term, "credit," applied to real-estate credit only, because we have to divide the real-estate credit into the Government financed housing program and the privately financed program.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], after conferring with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], who has a similar amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

> The Congress may also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of this act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate prior to June 30, 1952.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, this amendment provides that in case any one section of the pending bill proves to be unworkable, or if the Congress feels that for any reason the authority granted by this one section should be terminated, the authority granted by the section, or the section itself, can be terminated without having to repeal the entire control legislation by concurrent action.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is really a clarifying amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. It seems to me to be an essential amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] for the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question about another part of the bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to have another amendment acted on first. I send to the desk an amendment which I offer on behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On lines 7 and 8 of page 67 it is proposed to strike out the words "without limitation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not limited to."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the second amendment the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] asked the chairman of the committee to offer for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let us get the situation straight. How many amendments has the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MAYBANK. Two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina for the Senator from Ohio was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just read is the second amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. I offer it on behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the second amendment offered on behalf of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. The old act dealing with a similar subject provided a penalty for a seller who violated the law.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Is there any penalty provision in the bill which applies to a buyer?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; not for buyers for personal use or consumption. We have done away with any penalty for such buyers.

Mr. WHERRY. The way it has been done away with is that the buyer can recover in damages if he is overcharged, and the seller can be penalized, if he violates the law, by a fine of not to exceed $10,000. Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. The fine is not to exceed $10,000 and, of course, a jail sentence is also provided for.

Mr. WHERRY. All cases against violators of the law can be brought in the district court of the United States, can they not?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is my understanding.

Mr. WHERRY. So the district court of Nebraska would be available to try a Nebraska violator?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. It would not be necessary to bring him to the court in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. That applies with respect to the violation of any order or any regulation in the whole act? Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. To the best of my knowledge it does so apply.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand correctly that there is no penalty provided in the bill for the buyer of a product who pays more than the ceiling price for the product?

Mr. CAPEHART. The penalty is only against the seller.

Mr. MAYBANK. So far as I know there is no penalty against the consumer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does that apply also if the buyer happens to be buying for resale? For instance, if a dealer goes into the country and buys produce from a farmer over the ceiling price, does that mean that the buyer is clear and the farmer is subject to the penalty?

Mr. MAYBANK. He is subject to the penalty if he resells anything at above the ceiling price.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I mean there is no penalty against the buyer?

Mr. MAYBANK. The man who buys and resells at a price above the ceiling price is subject to the penalty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am speaking about a penalty provision against one who buys at a price over the ceiling price.

Mr. MAYBANK. There is no penalty provision on buying?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there no penalty against the city merchant who goes to the farm and pays over the ceiling price for produce? The penalty is entirely against the farmer who sells above the ceiling price. Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. No, there is a penalty against such a transaction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Where in the bill can I find any penalty against the merchant who buys produce at a price above the ceiling price?

Mr. MAYBANK. At the end of title IV.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As a practical matter, if we make the buyer subject to any sort of a penalty, then the buyer cannot prosecute the seller without himself being prosecuted. If the buyer was subject to a penalty in case a sale were made over the ceiling price, and he were subject to penalty, there would be no incentive for him to bring an action against the seller, if he himself, the buyer, were put in jeopardy by so doing.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator from Delaware will be good enough to turn to page 47, section 405, and read that section, he may find that it answers his question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point I am raising is this: A rather unpleasant situation arose in my State during the last war. A couple of produce dealers from Newark, N. J., came to Delaware and bought produce from a farmer. The farmer drew 60 days in jail and $1,000 fine, because the transaction involved a price over the ceiling price, whereas the produce merchants were given a negligible $25 fine each. It seems to me that in a situation of that kind equal guilt exists in the buyer and the seller.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me read section 405:

> It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material, service, or property, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

I think that pretty well covers the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I understand correctly that the buyer is equally guilty?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the way I construe that language.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator mean that the section provides that an action can be instituted against the buyer the same as against the seller? I do not understand the language in that way.

Mr. MAYBANK. The language is:

> It shall be unlawful * * * for any person * * * to buy or receive * * * in the regular course of business * * * in violation of this title—

And so forth. I do not imagine that an individual who bought some apples above the ceiling price which he took home to his family where the apples were eaten, or were cooked, would be subject to the penalty. But anyone who bought apples and resold them at a price above the ceiling price would be guilty, as well as the seller, under the section I read. That is the construction placed upon it by the legislative drafting clerk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I may say that in my opinion he who buys for resale at above the ceiling price should be held to be equally guilty with the man from whom he buys.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; he should be, and that is what the section provides.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I wanted to be sure about; that equal guilt is placed on the buyer and on the seller.

Mr. MAYBANK. If an individual who did not know the ceiling price on a product should buy it above the ceiling price, and if he was not in business and did not resell above the ceiling price, he would not be subject to the penalty. But the legislative counsel advises that according to section 405, when a transaction is made at above the ceiling price, both the seller and the buyer for resale are subject to the penalty provision, which is a jail sentence and not to exceed $10,000 fine, or both.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, is there an amendment pending before the Senate at the present time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina, as the Chair understands, has an amendment to offer.

Mr. MAYBANK. No, Mr. President. The amendment was agreed to. I offered an amendment on behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio, which was adopted.

Mr. AIKEN. That is my understanding.

I now call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to page 74, beginning in line 18, as follows:

> SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

Does the Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, believe that that paragraph would perhaps be strengthened by saying that "the President is authorized to place positions and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18"?

The reason I make that suggestion is that at the termination of World War II there was a great deal of difficulty in tearing down grades and salaries to fit the positions commensurate with peacetime activities. It seems to me if the President is authorized to employ persons in these grades temporarily that, while it might not avoid the same difficulty of job competition and resistance to cutting salaries and grades down to size, it certainly would demonstrate the intent of the Congress.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the Senator from Vermont that I feel as he does about the necessity for economy, and I am not one who believes in employing persons at big salaries for a long time unless they are necessary. The testimony before the committee by Secretary Sawyer and others showed the absolute necessity for obtaining the proper kind of persons to administer the act, if we ever have to use it. I see no objection to inserting the word "temporarily." The committee did not consider that. So far as I am concerned, I see no objection.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, on page 74, line 20, after the word "persons", I offer the amendment to insert the word "temporarily", unless there is some good reason for not doing so. It seems to me that we might as well avoid a great deal of trouble in advance.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that it occurs to me that, although the measure now provides a cut-off date of 2 years, nevertheless of course in the event further emergencies developed, it would be possible to extend the period of operation of the act.

In reference to the amendment proposing the insertion of the word "temporarily," I wonder how long the Senator would have the period of application continued. If the need for the program continues over a long period and if throughout that period it is necessary to pay higher salaries in order to obtain the services of persons qualified to operate the program, it seems to me this provision should apply longer than "temporarily."

Mr. AIKEN. I would say that the word "temporarily" would not apply to the cut-off date.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, the Congress could cut off this program in 2 weeks' time, if that proved to be desirable.

I am hopeful that provision will be made for continuing the program for 2 years, because, after all, at any time we shall have the power to cut off the program—even within 2 weeks' time. If the emergency in Korea and elsewhere were to terminate suddenly, the Congress could end this provision of law within 2 weeks.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I do not see how insertion of the word "temporarily" would handicap the operation of the law.

Mr. LONG. What would such an amendment mean?

Mr. AIKEN. It would mean that in our efforts to control the situation which ended following conclusion of World War II, by the employment of persons competent to serve in higher positions, we would not make it possible for such persons to resist having their positions cut back to the peacetime size of those positions, once the emergency terminated.

Of course, during wartime it is necessary to elevate such persons in rank and to make their jobs more attractive generally, in order to make it possible for the Government to obtain the services of persons of the requisite ability. It should not be necessary to do so; the exact size of the salary offered should not make any difference in a person's willingness to serve his country in time of need.

I understand that considerable difficulty was experienced in reducing such jobs to their peacetime size, at the end of the war.

Mr. President, if there were any legitimate objection to this amendment, I am sure the conferees would be informed of it; and in that case I would have no objection to having the provision changed to the way it reads now.

However, it seems to me that my amendment will enable us at least to attempt to avoid some of the difficulties we experienced at the end of World War II.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment, unless there is objection by Senators on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. May the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the amendment is in writing, it will be read by the Clerk.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that the Senator from Delaware wishes to ask a question of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Chair is mistaken, the Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. He yielded the floor to me, I believe.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know, Mr. President.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, it makes no difference.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the amendment calls for inserting, on page 74, in line 20, after the word "persons" the word "temporarily."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not in writing, is it?

Mr. AIKEN. No; I am offering the amendment from the floor. I cannot conceive of any objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the committee amendment on page 74, line 20.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I think it is the shortest amendment which will be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was any estimate made of the number of persons who will be needed under the classifications rereferred to in section 710?

Mr. MAYBANK. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there any way by which that can be determined?

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not think so. If titles IV or V are deleted, the situation will be entirely different as regards the number of persons required to be employed to administer the act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Senator from South Carolina of the opinion that some ceiling should be placed in regard to employment, so as to prohibit the hiring of all the employees under one classification?

Mr. MAYBANK. Oh, yes; I have always been of the opinion that in the case of large agencies, the number of employees should be limited. As chairman of the committee, when the bill is passed by the Senate and goes to conference, I would ask Mr. Symington and Mr. Sawyer to submit an estimate of the number of employees they would expect to have, and I should be glad to submit that information for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

However, that information cannot be obtained now, because we do not know in what form the bill will be passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from South Carolina obtain the information in regard to the employment necessary to be had under the various titles of the bill, and insert that information in the RECORD?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; because Mr. Symington and Mr. Sawyer do not know now in what form the bill will be passed. After the bill has been passed and is in conference, it will be in conference for some time, and during that time I shall be able to get the information the Senator requests. I would not wish to ask Mr. Symington and Mr. Sawyer to commit themselves about something which has not yet been determined. However, I assure the Senator that I shall make a point of consulting Mr. Symington and Secretary Sawyer and any others who may be involved, once the bill is in conference; and then I shall report to the Senate the information the Senator from Delaware has requested.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But by that time it will be too late.

Mr. MAYBANK. However, we cannot obtain that data now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Cannot the Secretary of Commerce give us an estimate now as to the number of employees required for the operations under the various titles of the bill as reported by the committee, assuming that the bill as reported by the committee is passed, and also an estimate of the number of employees required if we strike from the bill, when we pass it, titles II, III, IV, and/or V?

Mr. MAYBANK. We would never know until the President put on the standby controls.

However, I shall be only too glad to join the Senator from Delaware or any other Senator in having as few persons as possible employed and in making the administration of the act as economical as possible, and in cutting the size of the operations and of the funds available for the operations under the act to the minimum size possible, the smallest size with which the act can be administered.

Certainly I do not believe in having an excessive number of employees placed on the government payroll. After all, I have never been a great admirer of much of the operation of the Civil Service system.

Mr. WILLIAMS. However, the bill as it now stands would provide wide-open authority, insofar as employment is concerned.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course; but we cannot say now how many persons the President will employ under this measure, when we do not yet have the bill passed or a conference report on the bill.

I would not wish to ask such questions of Mr. Symington or the Secretary of Commerce, because to do so would be entirely futile.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nevertheless, it seems to me that it is ridiculous for us to consider making certain provisions when we have no estimate of the number of employees who would be required under those provisions.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course in the committee bill we have provision for separate selective price controls, although the House has not voted to include such provisions in the bill it has passed. Suppose the President were to place selective price or allocation controls on other commodities. If he did, a larger number of employees would be required. We cannot guess about that situation.

Let me say that I do not mind writing a letter in regard to the matter about which the Senator from Delaware inquires, if the Senator wishes me to do that; but I do not see what good it would do.

Of course, the Appropriations Committee must pass on these matters, insofar as the pay of Government employees is concerned. However, when the Congress passes measures calling for additional employees, the Appropriations Committees usually vote to report appropriation bills providing the necessary funds.

Nevertheless, of course, if the Senator wishes me to do so, I shall be glad to write to Secretary Sawyer, as chairman of the committee, and request that information. However, the Secretary of Commerce cannot state how many thousands of employees will be required, if he is unable to tell whether there will be operations in every county of the United States or whether there will be selective operations.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to invite attention to section 706 on page 71, and I should like to refer to the colloquy had a few minutes ago between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. I wish to be sure that I correctly understand that colloquy.

It is my understanding that the Senator from South Carolina said to the Senator from Nebraska, in effect, that all orders and decisions issued by any tribunal under this measure would be subject to review and appeal before any district court of the United States, anywhere in the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. I did not understand it that way, Mr. President. They would be restrained or enjoined only in the Emergency Court.

Mr. MORSE. Then I respectfully submit that the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Nebraska are miles apart, on the basis of the answer the Senator from South Carolina gave to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I recall, the Senator from Nebraska was talking about overcharges by persons who violate the law, insofar as prices are concerned.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I asked the question, during the course of the colloquy between the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES]—I think it was on last Friday—as to which court would have jurisdiction of the regulations and violations. I understod from the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and also from the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] that the court which would have jurisdiction would be the court set up under the act. Is that correct? I understand it is the Emergency Court of Appeals.

Mr. MAYBANK. To determine the constitutionality of regulations.

Mr. WHERRY. That is exactly what I understood the Senator to say.

Section 706 states:

> The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this act to enforce any liability or——

Mr. MAYBANK. Criminal liability.

Mr. WHERRY. Perhaps. Very well. That is a little different from what I thought it was. At any rate the district courts are limited to civil actions——

Mr. MAYBANK. Criminal and civil.

Mr. WHERRY. Civil and criminal actions with respect to liability for violations of the regulations and orders, is that it?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct—to enjoin them.

Mr. WHERRY. What about the labor violation? It refers to violations on the part of employer or employee, and to disputes.

Mr. MAYBANK. So far as the labor sections are concerned, we have the national labor relations laws and the so-called Taft-Hartley law. It refers very particularly to it in one section.

Mr. WHERRY. What court would have jurisdiction? Where would the complaint be filed to institute prosecution? I do not want to be too technical, but I raise the point which the Senator from Oregon has raised.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I take the floor for 2 or 3 minutes in my own right, and out of a motivation to be helpful to the committee. I want to make a very few brief remarks tonight on section 706. I shall discuss it at considerable length later on in the week, if we are unable to work out what I think is a very much needed revision of this bill in respect to the review powers.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a statement?

Mr. MORSE. I yield, if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I can readily understand, I believe, what I think is in the Senator's mind with reference to certain sections of the bill. Before the Senator came in, I had advised Senators that we were calling a meeting of the committee for 5 o'clock, but we wanted to get through with a few uncontested amendments before we met. The Committee on Banking and Currency was to meet in the Appropriations Committee room, and the committee is meeting now. While I do not want to leave, because I should like to be enlightened by the Senator from Oregon, who knows so much about these matters, yet I should like to be able to go to the meeting, and I will read with interest what the Senator has to say about it. I think the Senator has in mind something we are going to discuss tonight in our executive meeting.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I intend to use not more than 5 minutes in calling attention to something I think the Senate, and particularly the committee, must keep in mind before this bill is finally acted on by the Senate. It is that an economic control bill is not worth the paper it is written on, unless it is workable and capable of accomplishing its objectives. If it has imbedded within it procedures that assure its unworkability, then I think we should eliminate such procedures before the bill is passed. I respectfully submit this bill, in its present form, is so unworkable for accomplishing its purposes in respect to mobilizing the economy and producing a uniformity of action across the country that I most respectfully and sincerely express to the committee the hope that it will reconsider the bill from the standpoint of its procedure.

The Senator from South Carolina may think that section 706 applies only to criminal matters, but if he will reread the section he will see that it is a blanket section. Let me read it:

> The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, order or subpena thereunder—

And so forth. Mr. President, I do not know how a lawyer could set about writing a section in a bill that more clearly gives to the district courts of the United States the power of review over the administration of this act than does section 706. We should keep in mind that the primary purpose of this kind of economic legislation is to help with the successful prosecution of the war. That is the purpose. It calls for action and uniformity of action. Believe me, Mr. President, it will be impossible to obtain action if the orders which are issued under this bill are to be subject to review by all the district courts of the United States. I think we must assume that these standby powers, if the international situation becomes serious enough, will be implemented and put into effect, and their implementation is going to call for the setting up of an administrative tribunal for pricing boards, for rationing boards, for an allocating board, and for labor boards. Unless I completely misunderstand the purpose of the bill, it is going to call for the setting up by the President of the United States, through such Executive orders as he may decide to issue in conformity with the spirit, intent, and purpose of the bill, of whatever agencies of government may be necessary to take jurisdiction over segments of our economy and to mobilize them for the war effort.

As a lawyer, Mr. President, I know how easy it is for lawyers to argue that in a situation such as that, we ought to grant the district courts of the Nation the power to review, to code, and to enjoin, if necessary, the decisions of these tribunals as they affect businesses, unions, and individuals within the jurisdiction of the court. No Member of the Senate will defend that power of judicial review in peacetime more than will the junior Senator from Oregon. But war is a different thing. When we are at war, Mr. President, the rights and liberties of each one of us must be subject to the common good and to the common emergency. We cannot have the lack of uniformity which is inherently breathed into this section and which is an inevitability if it stands in the law.

I illustrate what I mean by making the assumption that in the face of this international crisis the President decides by Executive order, which I think this bill would authorize him to issue, to establish a war labor board. To do what? To carry out what I assume will come to pass by way of an agreement, namely, an agreement on the part of American industry and labor, as in the last war, that they will not settle their differences by economic action during the emergency or the war, but will settle their differences through a no-strike-no-lockout agreement, with both sides submitting their issues to the War Labor Board for determination. The strength and effectiveness of that Board is going to be in the uniformity of its policies applied across the country without discrimination. Consider some of the problems which confront that Board. Let us take the manpower problem of pirating, for example. One of the great problems which confronted us in World War II was the attempt on the part of certain employers to pirate away from other employers who were doing essential work for the war effort the men they sorely needed in community X and moving them into community Y. There were some instances of pirating in the same labor market. It so happens in time of war that extraordinary powers have to be vested in the tribunals. Believe me, Mr. President, if we gave to a district court the power which I think is inherent in section 706 of the bill, the War Labor Board would very soon become prostrate and ineffective.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I should like to finish my point, and then I shall be glad to yield.

It would find its decisions and policies tied up in half a dozen district courts.

I could paint a picture, Mr. President, of what would happen to labor morale in this country, or what would happen in the field of industrial labor. Instead of having no-strike-no-lockout agreements, we would be confronted overnight with strikes across the Nation, because, after all, we have got to have a Board with the power, under Executive order, to apply uniform labor policies during a national emergency.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that at this very moment the Senate Banking and Currency Committee is in executive session. I am the only member of that committee left on the floor, and I have been excused from attending the meeting in order to remain here. The committee is meeting for the purpose of perfecting an amendment aimed at the very thing the Senator has so clearly pointed out, namely, the manner in which orders or transactions of the Labor Board, or Labor Disputes Board, or whatever it may be called, might be tied up. Representatives of the interested departments and agencies came to see us today and said they had made a slip in the drafting of the bill. They have proposed an amendment, and the committee is in session at this time considering it.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, that being the case, I shall suspend the discussion until I see the amendment. I would add only this point, however, that I hope it is not an amendment that narrows its application only to the tribunal that will handle labor cases, because I think the same principle applies to economic mobilization in fields other than industrial labor cases.

Do not misunderstand me, Mr. President. I am not saying there should not be a review; I am saying that the review must be channelized, in my judgment, through a special court or through special courts which will follow a uniform policy for the period of the emergency. We cannot have one rule in regard to prices in Kentucky, the State from which the Presiding Officer comes, another rule in Oregon, and still another rule in Nebraska, because that kind of lack of uniformity would have a tremendous effect upon the morale of the American people. Of course, it would result in legalistic tactics on the part of selfish interests which are not always, I regret to say, willing to give evidence of their inclination to subordinate their selfish interest for the common good in the most effective prosecution of the war.

Therefore, Mr. President, I want this bill very carefully scrutinized from the standpoint of the enforceability of the decisions and orders to be rendered under it, because if the procedure permits an emasculating or weakening effect of the orders, we may as well not have any bill at all.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course, I appreciate the remarks which the Senator from Oregon has made regarding a careful study of the bill. I admit that we all need to study it in order to know what is in it. It is a bill which is rather complex in its many provisions, but it is a bill to which the committee has given a great deal of attention.

In his study of the procedure of the courts, I wish the Senator from Oregon would include section 408, which commences on page 50 and ends on page 54 of the bill. I particularly invite his attention to that part of subsection (d) which is on page 54, in which we give to the emergency court of appeals and to the United States Supreme Court exclusive jurisdiction over certain things, namely, to test the constitutionality of the act. We felt that by establishing that requirement, we would obtain uniformity.

The other matters referred to under section 706 relate to both criminal and civil actions which may be brought against individuals. The power of injunction, the power to stay, and the power to restrain are given in section 706. The Government may go into the judicial system wherever a violation of the act is about to be committed and get an injunction against the person so as to restrain the doing of an unlawful act.

I do not know whether I misunderstood the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Nebraska with reference to section 706, but I do not see that there could be any objection to the jurisdiction conferred by it. It does not mean that a person could be dragged from one district into another district and prosecuted, or made answerable to a damage suit. It is laid down according to regular rules of procedure. The court has criminal jurisdiction where the violation occurs. The court has civil jurisdiction where the defendant lives. That is according to the usual, everyday procedure. It relates not to a test of the constitutionality of the act, or regulations or orders that are issued under the act, but to the trial of criminal violations and civil suits for the awarding of triple damages, and to enjoin a violation of the act. I believe we ought to keep in mind very clearly the two distinct sections, namely, section 408 and section 706.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to call the attention of my very good friend from Alabama to the fact that section 408, at page 50 of the bill, to which he has called my particular attention, and especially subsection (d) on page 53, deals, as he points out, only with the procedure for testing the constitutionality of the act.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Or the validity of a regulation or order under the act.

Mr. MORSE. As to its constitutionality.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And the validity of its issuance.

Mr. MORSE. If that be true, section 408 is inconsistent with section 706, and it is impossible to reconcile it with section 706. A reading of section 706 clearly shows that it is sought there to provide for a test of the constitutionality of the act through an emergency court.

That is one place where I do not believe there is a need for an emergency court in which to test the constitutionality of the act. Constitutionality can be tested in any Federal court, and one can go from there to the Supreme Court. That is one question as to which we need least of all an emergency court. It is the type of problem which would come under section 706 in which uniformity is needed, in which it is necessary to watch out for diversity, and in which it is necessary to avoid an undermining of administrative bodies which have been given a war job to do. We must constantly keep in mind the fact—and this is what so many people do not like to admit—that whenever there exists a cause which justifies this kind of administrative set-up peacetime procedures simply must go by the board for a while, particularly with reference to legal delays and technicalities which may require months to do by before it is possible to get a test of the question whether a labor board, rationing board, allocation board, or pricing board was right in an order such a board issued with respect to Mr. X, Mr. Y, or Mr. Z. Time simply does not permit of the luxury of that kind of procedure in wartime. Section 706 applies to the validity of these decisions.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That kind of action could not be brought under section 706. It would have to be brought under section 408. Section 706 permits the Government to start, first, criminal prosecutions and, second, civil suits. For what purpose? For the recovery of triple damages and for the purpose of restraining or enjoining a violation of a rule or regulation. The validity or constitutionality of the act, or of any regulation or order cannot be tested under section 706. I do not think the Senator from Oregon would say that if a person who lives in a remote part of his State of Oregon were to violate the act, and the Government wanted an injunction issued against him, the Government ought to go into the district court or an emergency court of appeals sitting in Washington, or a district court sitting in a remote State, and start an action against the man, instead of going into the district court in the State of Oregon in the district in which the man lives. That is all that section 706 provides.

Mr. MORSE. I am very glad to have the assurance of my very good friend from Alabama as to what he thinks section 706 provides. I wish to tell him here and now that in my humble opinion he is dead wrong as to the legal effect of section 706, and that he is dead wrong about a very elementary principle, too, of legal procedure in his assumption that section 706 gives to the government a unilateral right in a district court and denies to a citizen the right to press his claim against the Government. The Senator had better wake up if he thinks that is what the section provides. He will wake up very early in the administration of the act to find he is wrong, because a district court will say the language is clear:

> The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder.

If a labor board had handed down a decision in a union maintenance case, for example, in the State of Oregon, I would not hesitate for a moment to argue befort the district court in Oregon that I wanted the court to hear my case in regard to an injunction which was sought to be issued against my client under such order of the board. I do not think the court would throw me out on any such contention as the Senator from Alabama has advanced, namely, that section 706 applies only to the Government, and not to my client. If that is what the committee had in mind, the language can be changed. However, the language is not in the bill at the present time. I submit that section 408 makes perfectly clear that the committee intended the emergency court to be the channel through which an early testing of the constitutionality of the act could be had. Apparently that is what they had in mind. Therefore there is no point in carrying on the colloquy except to say that I think the sections are as clear as mud. Furthermore, if they are capable of the interpretation I have made of them, they ought to be qualified at an early hour.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he yields the floor?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wish the Senator would follow the section very closely with me.

Mr. MORSE. Which section?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Section 706. I am as completely convinced of error on the part of the Senator from Oregon as he seems to be convinced of error on my part. Legislative counsel, who draft bills——

Mr. MORSE. I have known them to be wrong many times.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This was a matter of discussion in committee, and we were assured that our interpretation was correct. I should like to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that this section follows almost word for word the language which was contained in the wartime act. I said a short time ago that jurisdiction was limited to the Government under section 706. I wish to make one exception to that statement. The individual citizen has the right to sue for triple damages, but that is the only right that is given him in the section.

Mr. MORSE. The chairman of the committee told us that provision had been taken out.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Perhaps the Senator did not understand the chairman's full answer, or the chairman did not answer the question fully. It is in the section, but the limitation is $10,000. No one fine shall exceed $10,000.

Mr. MORSE. That was not the answer the Senator from Nebraska received.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Regardless of that, I am sure that if the Senator from South Carolina made the statement referred to, this is what he had reference to, because we inserted a limitation of $10,000 as the amount which could be added to the triple damages.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from South Carolina, in answer to a question by the Senator from Nebraska, stated that triple damages were out of the bill, and in their place an aggrieved party could initiate an action, a buyer from a seller, to recover the loss that was sustained in the overcharge, with provision of not to exceed a $10,000 fine if he could substantiate his claim.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The statement of the $10,000 limitation is correct, but the damages up to that point may be triple damages.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to know exactly whether that is the situation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will yield, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to page 55, subsection (c), of section 409, which reads:

If any person selling any material—

And so forth—

in any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based—

Provided it is not more than $10,000.

I am sure the Senator from South Carolina had that in mind when he said it was out. It is in, with the limitation of $10,000. He meant that it was out in excess of that amount.

Going back to section 706, if the Senator from Oregon will follow me, it is provided:

The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder.

It shall have jurisdiction of violations of any one of those things, in criminal cases arising because of the violation by any party of any provision of this act, any rule, any regulation, any order, or any subpena issued thereunder.

Mr. MORSE. Oh, the Senator overlooked the little word "or."

Mr. SPARKMAN. It says "of this act."

Mr. MORSE. "Violations of this act, or."

Mr. SPARKMAN. I said that.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator said it, but he did not give the proper interpretation to it when he said it. The moment we say "violations of this act", we give the district courts jurisdiction over the offenses set out, and it cannot be changed unless we get rid of the word "or", or insert language which makes clear what we are trying to do. I should like to have a debate with the Senator on the power to do it, but let us assume there is the power to do it, that we have the intention of giving to the district courts jurisdiction over violations and rules and regulations which some tribunal subsequently set up under the act, about which we do not know at the present time, might wish to enforce against a citizen or corporation or partnership within a State for violation of some decision of one of those tribunals, but the bill does not say which.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator understand that the force of the word "violations" continues with each one of those coordinate words?

Mr. MORSE. What the Senator from Oregon is saying is that the first use of the word "violations" in the bill vests in the courts jurisdiction over the tribunals as well as over individual defendants who may be brought before the court by tribunals for violations of some rule or regulation of the tribunal.

I respectfully submit that this section is subject to the interpretation of some district court, that when the Congress writes into the act the first part of the section prior to the word "or," it gives to the district courts jurisdiction to pass judgment in review upon the decision of a pricing board, or labor board. I think our dispute is a dispute over terminology. If the language employed does not express the intention, the language can be modified, and if the committee is modifying it downstairs at this time, that is fine.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I desire to make it clear that the conference downstairs relates only to labor features.

Mr. MORSE. Then they are doing only part of the job.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The purpose is specifically to take out orders which may be issued in connection with wage-and-labor disputes.

Mr. MORSE. I see no reason why some special procedure should be set up for labor and not for the other problems.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I think I know, from the discussion we have had here, that we have the same thing in mind. The committee is reinforced by the legislative counsel, by the legislative experts who came to us from the Department of Commerce, and from the National Security Resources Board, and we are reinforced by our own staff members, that the wording here is proper and correct to accomplish the purpose we have in mind. If the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Nebraska can offer language which will, in their minds, make it clear that what we want done will be done, I see no objection to it.

TEXT OF STATEMENT BY MINORITY MEMBERS OF FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN POLICY IN EUROPE AND ASIA

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD the text of the statement issued by the minority members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, minority Senators of the Foreign Relations Committee, herein expressing our individual views, pledge our full support to the national effort to build strength for victory. We pay tribute to the heroism and sacrifice of our fighting men in Korea. To be worthy of them we must, above all, face the future with faith, realism and courage.

In this spirit and in discharge of our duty under the American two-party system to scrutinize relentlessly the basic facts of America's position in the world, we set forth:

I, an analysis of the events of 1945 which today bear so directly on America's present world position;

II, an analysis of the crucial events which began in 1947; and

III, our recommendations for future action.

I. 1945

The major tragedy of our time was the failure and refusal of American leadership in 1945 to recognize the true aims and methods of the rules of Soviet Russia. To this failure can be traced the disintegration of our armed forces in 1945, which would not have occurred if the need for retaining adequate forces had been explained to the American people, and the senseless destruction of billions of dollars worth of military equipment which the United States and its friends so desperately need today.

To this failure also can be traced the blindness of our leadership in ignoring the Communist attempts to capture the minds of men. We missed the opportunity to broadcast to the world our democratic doctrine of the dignity of man as the spiritual rallying-point for all freedom-loving peoples.

By this failure we lost the initiative and the influence for peace which we had won by force of arms and by virtue of our historic pioneering in the evolution of democracy.

To this failure adequately to understand the Soviet mind and purposes the major troubles of the world today are due, notably the following:

1. The disastrous consequences of the Big Three conferences at Yalta and Potsdam in 1945. From these conferences stemmed the weakening of the United Nations; the Communist capture of eastern Europe and of China; and the unfolding disaster in the Far East—all of which were accentuated by subsequent administration policy.

2. The partition of Germany, whereby the western border of the Russian zone was drawn apparently so as to include many of the best military locations in Western Germany. Added to this is the arrangement whereby Berlin became an island, completely surrounded by Russian territory, without any adequate assurance of the right of access by land.

3. Our failure vigorously to build strong American armed forces and early to take adequate measures, such as helping to build

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable, and is authorized, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government. The expenses of the committee, under this resolution, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I may say that the shortage of cement is very acute. We are unable to get any cement in the northwestern part of the United States. When I discussed the matter with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], who is chairman of a subcommittee investigating increases in prices, he said his committee had no authority to go into the subject. Therefore I am submitting the resolution to give the subcommittee authority to investigate cement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On line 1, page 45, after the words "specified above", it is proposed to insert: "Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the amendment has been printed?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It has been printed. It was submitted last week. It is amendment lettered "W." The language was copied from the former OPA law, and it is incorporated in the House bill. While it is somewhat in line with the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], as amended by the Senator from Nebraska, which was adopted yesterday, it covers processing of all farm products. The provision was contained in the law last year, and it is contained in the House bill this year.

Mr. WHERRY. Is this the amendment regarding which I engaged in colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the committee?

Mr. MAYBANK. It is.

Mr. WHERRY. There is nothing in the amendment pertaining to producers?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It contains only what was in the law.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I can argue the amendment if there is any need for me to do so.

Mr. WHERRY. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to make a short supplemental statement. After the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] made his proposal on yesterday I planned to offer an amendment relating to a prohibition against requiring grade labeling, and had a provision relating to it drawn up. However, this morning I find that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] had an amendment dealing with grade labeling, which is in exactly the form in which I had proposed to offer an amendment. He has submitted the amendment at a more appropriate place in the bill than it would have come under my proposed amendment. Therefore, I shall not offer my amendment. I shall support the amendment when offered by the Senator from Ohio.

I closing, I wish to emphasize what the chairman has already stated, namely, that he has no more requests from the Democratic side to speak on the bill, and so far as I know there are no further requests from the Reupblican side to speak on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Did the Senator say there were no requests from the Republican side to speak on the bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The chairman had no requests from the Democratic side to make a general speech on the bill. So far as I know he has had no requests from any Republican Member to make a general speech on the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to have an opportunity to say a word with reference to the subject. No one on the Democratic side had requested any further time to speak on the bill, and no further request had come from the other side of the aisle when recessed the Senate on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. At that time we could not get any additional speakers. This morning the distinguished Senator from Nebraska said the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] wanted to speak on it today, but there had not been anyone else who had asked him for time to speak on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that is exactly correct, but I do not want the impression to be created that there will not be requests for a chance to make speeches on this side of the aisle, on the bill, or the amendments to it, because I know there will be before the bill is passed.

An amendment is being framed, I think, regarding court procedure, a question which was brought up last night by the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. Possibly that amendment will be so framed that it will be satisfactory, or an explanation will be made.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. We never discussed amendments which are to be proposed. I merely made a general speech on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct, and possibly other general speeches are to be made, as they have been made.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. But I submit that when all the amendments to the committee amendment which have been offered by the distinguished chairman and other Senators, such as the distinguished Senator from Virginia, have been acted on, and when we start in with the amendments being offered from the floor—already I have counted 29, and many of them are not printed—some speeches may be made.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I wish to repeat what I previously stated. The chairman of the committee has received no requests for opportunity to make general speeches on the bill, and, so far as I know, up to this time, he has received no requests as to general speeches on the Republican side. I did not mean to intimate that there would not be speeches on the Republican side. As a matter of fact, I heard this morning that a movement was under way to put off action on the bill until some time next week.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. That did not come from the Republican side of the aisle. I am speaking for the Republican side now. The Republican side is ready to proceed with the bill, and we are ready to try to enter into a unanimous consent agreement which will be acceptable to the Members of the Senate. The Republicans in Congress wanted to have an explanation of the bill; we have had a fine explanation of it, and the prevailing sentiment has been that we should proceed in as orderly a manner as possible and try to have an early disposition of the bill. I am satisfied that the distinguished junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], who has charge of the bill for the minority, will verify that statement.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, what the Senator from Nebraska has said is accurate.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Nebraska told me he would like to finish the consideration of the bill as soon as possible. When do Senators think we can reach an agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that the Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If my colleagues will permit me to finish the brief statement I am going to make, I shall then yield the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not care for the floor, but the distinguished Senator from Virginia made some observations which I want the RECORD to show, so far as our side of the aisle is concerned, do not represent the feeling on this side. I say that with all kindness to the distinguished Senator. I am satisfied that if the Senator will stay with us, and we quit talking and go to voting, that will be the quickest way to make progress on the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I agree with that. I did not make any charges against the Republican side, or against anyone in particular. I merely said I heard a rumor today that a movement was under way to prevent a vote on the bill this week. I certainly heard the rumor. I am glad to have the assurance of the distinguished minority leader that that did not originate on his side of the aisle.

I wish to emphasize that yesterday, after I had made a little plea that business be expedited, and that speeches be confined to the bill, at least one-third of the time was spent in a discussion of our relations with China, and of course that is important; a discussion of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, and of course that is important; and discussion of some other questions which were of importance. A good deal of time was consumed during which we could have been acting on amendments.

When we met this morning the proceedings were opened with an interesting discussion of the Korean war; and of course that is important.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The discussion on the Korean war was started by a Senator on the other side of the aisle yesterday.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I could not control it, but I certainly do not commend those who inject any extraneous issues into the consideration of the pending question.

Mr. President, the pending bill is an important measure. As I said on yesterday, time is of the essence. This is a war measure, we need it enacted now, and we should act on it as soon as possible. We are met with delays, first one thing and another. A little while ago there were 18 or 20 Senators present. Then the number dropped down to 14, and now it is down to less than 12, perhaps less than 10. It is difficult to know, with all the amendments pending, when we are going to debate them and finish them.

Mr. President, I have already observed a movement on the part of everyone who is going to be affected by the bill to come forward and push an amendment in our faces, saying, "Take care of me with this amendment." If this matter is strung out for an unnecessary length of time, we are going to have amendments from every source, from every factory, that is being affected with a plea to insert some provision that will take care of them. If we yield to those pleas, we will have to vote on amendments which have not been studied by the committee, on which we have not had expert advice, and if we adopt many of them, we will fulfill the prediction made on the floor of the Senate yesterday that we will get the bill in such shape that the Senate will be forced to recommit it to the committee in order to find out what the bill means.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not sure what amendment the Senator from Virginia is talking about, but certainly he does not want to foreclose Members of the Senate from offering constructive amendments which they feel will strengthen the bill.

For example, the junior Senator from Nebraska offered an amendment yesterday which I think is very helpful, so far as the meat industry is concerned. I have an amendment which I am going to offer to the bill on page 77. The reason why I have not offered it was because I wanted to talk to the Senator from South Carolina to see if he would not offer it, or join with me in offering it. It is an amendment to provide that if the bill goes into effect with voluntary agreements, after the military has taken its supply the civilian distribution will be made through the normal channels of trade. That is not in the bill.

I state to the distinguished Senator from Virginia that the greatest trouble that arose in connection with the last OPA law was that those who had lost their source of supply because of orders of the OPA had to look elsewhere for it, and when they did, they had a very difficult time obtaining their supplies.

Mr. President, I think the amendment is a good, constructive amendment, and I hope it will meet the approval of the Members of the Senate. I am sure the Senator from Virginia would like to have an amendment like that offered so as to make the bill as good a measure as possible.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So far as I am concerned, as an individual member of the committee, I welcome any amendment calculated to improve the bill, because I frankly admit that the bill is not perfect. We did not have a chance to make it a perfect bill. The committee in the House did not hear any witnesses except Government witnesses, and we were approached with the statements such as this, "Rubber is going up, lumber is going up, sugar is running out in the retail stores. Why don't you do something?" The committee tried to consider the bill, so far as we had a chance to, and after the administration leaders had given us what they considered to be a rather carefully prepared bill, we heard the testimony of Mr. Baruch. The country responded. I do not have to tell my colleagues how the country responded to his plea for over-all controls. Then we were forced into the consideration of that question.

Now we have pending before us amendments to strike out titles IV and V. What boots it to stay here amending title IV if we are to strike it from the bill? I do not see why we cannot have an early vote on either striking title IV from the bill or leaving it in the bill. That title involves a matter of general policy on which I assume Members of the Senate have already made up their minds. They either want the stand-by powers with respect to price, wage and rationing controls at the retail and consumer level, or they do not want them. The House did not want them and did not put them in the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, what the Senator from Virginia says about an early vote is true. But I am sure he will agree with me that the theory on which the Senate must proceed is for Senators to offer amendments to the committee amendment, which is the bill before the Senate. When the bill is perfected, possibly amendments may be offered to titles IV and V. If we should have an early vote on either title IV or title V without the perfecting amendments having been acted upon, some Senators might not vote for the bill itself. Certainly the Senator from Virginia will agree with me that the orderly procedure is to offer amendments to the committee amendment, which is the Senate bill. The committee amendment is the bill itself, and if there are any perfecting amendments to be offered to titles IV and V, they should be offered now. I do not know that any Senator is going to offer any further amendments than those which have been offered to titles IV and V. I have three or four minor amendments which I think will help clarify the bill. I am satisfied the Senator from Virginia will agree that they are constructive amendments, whether he is for them or not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, disclaiming any intention to level any criticism at any individual, or at any specific amendment, or at any particular procedure, but merely reiterating my earnest hope that we may proceed to consider the bill and vote on it at as early a moment as possible, I hope we can vote on the amendment I have offered, which was a part of the old law and is a part of the House bill, and which, I understand, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is willing to accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia made the statement that I was willing to accept the amendment. I do not feel that I can accept any amendment unless the committee meets again and considers it. The committee held a meeting last evening. At that meeting the committee voted 9 to 0 to accept certain amendments. Several Senators have asked me to accept amendments they wish to offer. I made the statement last night that if we amend the bill by accepting amendments offered by every Senator who has an amendment to offer we will get nowhere. I do not believe we can legislate OPA rules on the Senate floor. I appreciate the amendment the Senator from Virginia has offered. At the meeting of the committee held last evening one of the amendments considered was that offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES]. We discussed the amendment fully, and it was agreed that we should accept it as a committee amendment. I agreed to such action.

I make no criticism of my good friend, the Senator from Virginia, or of the minority leader, but if we accept an amendment here and another amendment there we will be swamped with amendments. We cannot legislate on the Senate floor. None of the amendments were brought before the committee during the 2 or 3 weeks it was in session. I admit that yesterday we adopted an amendment which was the language of the old Barkley-Bates bill passed in 1946. It will go to conference. Of course, the Senator from Virginia has a right to call for a vote on his amendment. But the conference committee will have to consider the various amendments and make a report.

The Committee on Banking and Currency made an extensive report respecting what we thought ought to be done about free enterprise and voluntary controls. The Senator from Nebraska has spoken on that subject. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] has an amendment which would turn over all the controls to the Secretary of Commerce. I think that amendment is wrong. I think it was the sense of the committee that the subject of voluntary controls on steel should be left for decision to the Secretary of Commerce. But I do not think any voluntary controls that might be necessary in connection with commodity exchanges and others should be left to decision by the Secretary of Commerce. Certain types of voluntary controls should be left with Secretary Brannan and others who know more about the matters involved than does the Secretary of Commerce. I am sure that Secretary of Commerce Sawyer knows more about steel and control agreements with respect to steel than anyone else, because he has had to deal with such matters before. The other amendments, however, are so complicated that I hesitate to accept any of them.

I may say to my friend from Virginia that I believe much of the work of writing the bill is to be done in the free conference and in the report the free conference committee will make. We cannot accept amendments dealing with lumber, sheep, and hogs and and a great variety of other commodities. We can legislate only respecting the over-all picture on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I hope I have not offended my friend from Virginia by my statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Oh, no; Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina certainly has not offended me. If I have by anything I said indicated that I felt that way, I withdraw the statement.

As a member of the committee of the Senate having the bill under consideration I have offered an amendment which I believed to be a good amendment, the language of which was in the law during the last war. If any Member of the Senate is opposed to it I have not heard him say so. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Virginia yielded the floor?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have yielded the floor, but I hope I can secure a vote on my amendment.

Mr. LANGER. I want the floor in my own right, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have yielded the floor.

PRICES—HOARDING—SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am somewhat startled to hear my distinguished friend from Virginia say that everything is going up, butter, metals, cement, wire, lumber—that everything is going up, and he wants haste to be made in passing the bill. I ask my distinguished friend, What has the Democratic Party been doing ever since and during World War I? World War I came on, and 72,000 new millionaires were created. Everything went up and up and up in price, and the party in power did nothing permanent about it. Not one single law is upon the statute book dealing permanently with the subject of increase in prices. Where has the responsibility to the people of the United States been ever since 1933? Then under the Democratic administration we got into another great war—World War II. We turned over millions and millions of dollars to the Department of Justice and thousands and thousands of lawyers were put upon the payroll, lawyers who were good at drawing up any kind of legislation the Democratic Party wanted. Where are laws providing against hoarding or the upping of prices to farmers and laborers and other consumers, Mr. President? There are none.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I shall not yield now. I did not interrupt the distinguished Senator, and I do not yield now.

This is the record of the Democratic Party. We come into the Korean situation without one single law upon the statute books against hoarding or the charging of outrageous prices to consumers. As my distinguished friend from Virginia said, everything is going up and up and up. After 17 years of Democratic rule, with two world wars having occurred, no legislation has been passed during all the intervening time. The Senator now comes in and overnight he suddenly wants laws passed that are going to control the situation.

But, Mr. President, not only is food going up in price, but in the Northwest we cannot obtain cement. That is why I submitted a resolution a while ago. I shall present another resolution dealing with an investigation of the shortage of box cars. Some 3 or 4 years ago I submitted Senate Resolution 185, and under the leadership of the late Senator Reed, of Kansas, we had a thorough investigation of the subject of box car shortage. In that investigation we found that millions and millions of bushels of wheat and flax and other grains were piled up throughout the Northwest.

Mr. President, I have received a telegram under date of August 10, 1950, as follows:

FARGO, N. DAK., August 10, 1950.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Harvest beginning in North Dakota. Large percentage elevators still carrying large bushelage 1949 crop. Railroads serving State way short of their car ownership. Almost impossible to get cars for loading. American Association Railroads not allotting enough cars to this area. Unless situation relieved much grain will be on ground.

R. F. GUNKELMAN.

That telegram is signed by R. F. Gunkelman, one of the outstanding elevator men of North Dakota.

Mr. President, I took up this matter with the various authorities. After talking it over with Mr. King and the man in charge of the allocation of railroad cars, I sent the following telegram to Mr. Gunkelman:

AUGUST 11, 1950.

R. F. GUNKELMAN,
Fargo:

Reurtel: Interstate Commerce Commission advises situation critical but North Dakota getting their share. They have assured me we will continue to have a fair percentage of the box cars available. Understand military preference takes up some of these. Let me know if situation doesn't improve. Regards.

LANGER.

This morning I received the following letter:

DEAR SENATOR: Your telegram came in this afternoon. The information that the Interstate Commerce Commission gives sounds good but has absolutely no bearings on this situation.

If North Dakota was getting its fair share of cars our western railroads would have 100 percent of ownership on line. The Great Northern, Northern Pacific, and Soo Line own a considerable number of boxcars that would give our farmers the service that they are entitled to during the harvest period.

Mr. President, I may add that other States—Minnesota, Kansas, South Dakota, and Montana—are in exactly the same situation that North Dakota is in. After I received those messages I made an investigation; but all I got from the Interstate Commerce Commission was one excuse after another. They say the situation is so critical that they do not know of anything they can do about it, and that the elevator companies and farmers will simply have to get along as best they can.

The letter from Mr. Gunkelman continues, as follows:

After the harvest is over with, then the percentage of these cars could move on to the eastern railroads and be used there, but it is absolutely ridiculous and indefensible that the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, and Soo Line be under 70 percent of ownership, and that is the report that we have today, while eastern railroads are way above that ownership. The American Railway Association is today hiding behind the alibi of military needs. We have checked into this situation and taken the total number of cars now being used for military purposes and with these subtracted from what our roads are entitled to it would still give us a 91 or 92 percent of ownership. This is a situation that needs attention as most of our elevators are now practically plugged and with the present car situation the large percentage of North Dakota's crop will have to be on the ground when harvest gets under way.

Neither the Interstate Commerce Commission nor the American Railway Association has a leg to stand on in their contention that we are getting a fair share of the car supply, as this is not true and the Northwest public is getting fed up with the kind of treatment we have received the past few years.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

R. F. GUNKELMAN & SONS,
By R. F. GUNKELMAN.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a newspaper published at St. Paul, Minn. It is the Farmers Union Herald of August 7. The large headline on the first page is: "Boxcar shortage worst in years."

I am sorry there are not on the floor of the Senate at this time more Senators who only a short time ago were voting to give so much money to foreign countries. I wish to call attention to the fact that we have manufactured thousands upon thousands upon thousands of boxcars and have shipped them to one foreign country after another. The investigation made under my resolution showed that we shipped boxcars by the thousands to those countries.

The article on that subject appearing in this newspaper, the Farmers Union Herald, is typical of articles in many of the other newspapers in that area of the country. I shall submit the entire article for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but at this time I wish to call particular attention to the following portions of it:

While there are more cars than at the start of World War II, more than one-third of them are more than 25 years old. For the 2 years ending in June 1949, American railroads built 38,295 boxcars. In the same period, however, they junked 62,518. That left us with about 20,000 boxcars less than we had 2 years ago. And that is what is going to make the boxcar situation acute for farmers in the Northwest this fall.

Railroads themselves have estimated that it would take 10,000 new cars a month for a long period of time to build up essential facilities.

But they say that they have not got the money. At least two of the Nation's mammoth insurance companies, with millions in their vaults, have offered to build up to 100,000 boxcars and lease them to the railroads.

The insurance companies say that the rentals would give them a better return than their present investments. But so far the railroads have not taken to these proposals.

The net result is a serious lack of sturdy boxcars at a time when the Nation is in sore need of them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire article printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOXCAR SHORTAGE WORST IN YEARS

With movement of the Northwest grain harvest close at hand present indications are that the shortage of railroad boxcars this year will be the worst in many years.

Some country elevators already are reported plugged and many others may be before many weeks have passed. Farmers who want to move redeemed loan grain to clean out their bins for the new crop are going to find it tough going. And country elevators that want to move grain into the terminal markets are going to find boxcars are scarce as hen's teeth.

The American Association of Railroads will have a hard time explaining the shortage in view of the actual facts. There will be the old excuses that boxcars are in the Southwest hauling winter wheat or that they are in the East hauling war supplies. Those were the excuses when the situation was serious in the past. The association only recently stated that "it is anticipated that boxcar requirements for the spring wheat area will be taken care of satisfactorily." But a simple obscure statement like that does not actually produce boxcars.

The plain fact is that there are not enough boxcars to handle the Nation's needs.

While there are more cars than at the start of World War II, more than one-third of them are more than 25 years old. For the 2 years ending in June 1949, American railroads built 39,295 boxcars. In the same period, however, they junked 62,518. That left us with about 20,000 boxcars less than we had 2 years ago. And that is what is going to make the boxcar situation acute for farmers in the Northwest this fall.

Railroads themselves have estimated that it would take 10,000 new cars a month for a long period of time to build up essential facilities.

But they say that they have not got the money. At least two of the Nation's mammoth insurance companies, with millions in their vaults, have offered to build up to 100,000 boxcars and lease then to the railroads.

The insurance companies say that the rentals would give them a better return than their present investments. But so far, the railroads have not taken to these proposals.

The net result is a serious lack of sturdy boxcars at a time when the Nation is in sore need of them.

Mr. LANGER. So, Mr. President, we have another result of incompetency on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission and another record of incompetency on the part of the Democratic administration. Apparently the farmers of every country in the world are being taken care of, except the farmers of the United States. When we had the investigation under Senate Resolution 185, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Democratic administration had full notice of what the farmers in the Northwest had to do. I remember that at those hearings the distinguished Senator Capper rose and pleaded for more boxcars. I remember that when that meeting was held under the leadership of the late Senator Clyde Reed, we got the promise of the Interstate Commerce Commission to take care of the boxcar-shortage situation. That meeting was attended by more than 500 persons, including representatives of all the large farm organizations and representatives of one railroad commission after another. At the meeting was Mr. J. Monroe Johnson, who at that time was in charge of transportation in the United States of America, and now is a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. However, instead of getting the improvement that an administration which had at heart the welfare of the farmers of the Northwest would have brought about, we have had a situation which has deteriorated from that time until now, until today the situation in respect to boxcars is that we have 20,000 less boxcars than we had during World War II.

Mr. President, as I say, I am submitting the resolution. I do not know how much good it will do. If we cannot get into public offices for which the salaries were raised, a short time ago, men who will do the job, instead of going to parties, how can we expect to obtain results and get the job done?

Where has Mr. Brannan been, Mr. President; where has the Secretary of Agriculture been? Why has not he been on the job, to get the farmers the needed boxcars?

So, Mr. President, I rise today to bring this matter again to the attention of the Senate, as I have done time and time and time again in the past, when I have brought it to the attention of the Members of this body and also to the attention of the various public officials who have charge of moving the crops out of the Northwest.

Mr. President, every time a farmer has to pile up his grain it means that he sustains a loss. After World War II the Commodity Credit Corporation owned thousands of steel bins. What was done with them? The Government sold them; it got rid of them. What is the result? The farmer hauls his grain from the threshing machine and is told, "We cannot store it." He has to sell it, and it is bought as cheaply as it can possibly be purchased. The farmer finds that he cannot store his grain. At least, Mr. President, that was the situation at the time we conducted our investigation, and I do not think there has been any improvement from that time until this. So, Mr. President, instead of the farmer being able to store his grain and hold it for a higher price, he has to take what he can get for it on the very day he hauls it.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIFTH REGIMENTAL COMBAT TEAM SPEARHEADS OFFENSIVE; ALLIES CLOSING TRAP ON NAKTONG FOE

(By Peter Kalischer)

WITH THE FIFTH REGIMENTAL COMBAT TEAM, KOREA, August 9.—Hawaii's Fifth Regimental Combat Team gained another 3 miles along the southern road from Mason to Chinju tonight in its second consecutive night attack.

The dusty doughboys, who had been stalled for 2 days in wilting heat smashed along the road Tuesday night for six bloody miles, then added three more Wednesday.

The Fifth plunged forward and Corp. Lorrin F. Thurston, 21, and I attempted to catch up with the front lines on a hazardous jeep ride. Our mission: To deliver some hot food to front-line officers; their first in 3 days.

By the time we got to the front, the "I will try, sir," regiment had spearheaded the American drive six rugged miles past the jump-off of their southern drive and was still pushing ahead.

The units from Hawaii had launched one of the few American night attacks and by dawn Wednesday had captured their first objective—a ridge west of Chingdong and north of the Chinju-Masan road.

The combat team's executive officer, his face gray and his hair powdered with Korean dust, wearily pointed to a situation map and said:

"We are pushing and they are backing up. They blew the tracks off two marine tanks this morning with the first mine field we have run into—and I think they were our own captured mines. The boys dug up the rest of them with bayonets."

Just then a husky, broad-shouldered corporal came up, saluted, and announced he would be on his way to a forward position with some warm food for Lt. Col. John L. Throckmorton, Kansas City, Mo. It was Corporal Thurston, son of president and general manager Lorrin P. Thurston, of the Honolulu Advertiser.

I hitched a ride on his jeep, balancing a pot of tepid coffee on one knee.

"Got to get this to the colonel," Thurston explained as we bounced along. We drove west along the road from Chingdong.

A quarter of a mile along we came upon seven naked Korean men and one woman with a dress on, sitting and squatting on the road. The woman sat apart from the others. They were prisoners taken in the morning action and, as is customary, stripped of all clothing.

A harassed-looking lieutenant standing over them called out to us, "Hey, take over here, will you? I don't know what in hell to do with these characters. The one on the ground is supposed to have a broken hip."

"Sorry, sir, got to take this chow to Colonel Throckmorton," replied Corporal Thurston, who is a determined young man.

We drove on as the lieutenant began searching for another GI to stand guard. We passed the tread of one of the mined tanks lying like a shedded snakeskin on the right side of the road. And then another tank askew in a ditch. Nearby a dead Korean soldier lay with his fists clenched and arms upthrust in rigor mortis.

A convoy going east swirled by with headlights on under a burning sun and a cloudless sky. The lights were necessary to cut through the 30-foot wall of choking dust that stirred up.

Half a mile further, we passed a still smoldering Korean village. A blue-glazed china bowl lay miraculously unshattered in the middle of the road.

As we came around the bend, we were waved to a halt by an excited GI in a parked jeep.

"Snipers on the road ahead," he shouted. Thurston pulled his jeep behind a mud wall and we got out.

"Colonel Throckmorton wants to get his chow but we might as well have some of it, too," the unconcerned young corporal said. We opened up a pot full of meat and poured ourselves some coffee. As we ate, we relaxed and talked, despite the nearby snipers.

Thurston said his unit had been in the line for 6 days, long before the main body of the Fifth Regimental Combat Team had been committed. He had spent four of them running ammunition to forward positions.

"These North Koreans fight funny," he said as he sipped his coffee. "They keep coming at you. You can blast them with 50-caliber machine guns but they still come—across the paddies or up the hills. The main idea is to have enough .50-caliber ammunition to finish them off."

Behind us to the north, a few mortar shells began to fall. Pfc Edward Timmerman, Philadelphia, Pa., drove up in a jeep and parked next to Thurston's. Timmerman said a platoon of the fifth was in trouble behind a ridge on the north road and had called for heavy mortar support. I noticed his bandaged left hand.

"A sniper bullet went right through it yesterday," Timmerman explained. "Didn't hurt at all."

Mortar fire—friendly or enemy—began to crump closer to our position. Thurston suggested that we would be safe up the road with Colonel Throckmorton.

"These guys can't hit anything, anyway," he added.

We jumped into the jeep and barrelled the last 500 yards in where a group of officers, including Twenty-fifth Division Commander Maj. Gen. William Kean, were standing on the lee side of a medium tank.

Corporal Thurston presented the now cold chow to Colonel Throckmorton and I gave him the coffee.

"This is the first so-called hot meal I've had in 3 days," Colonel Throckmorton commented.

The colonel said General Kean was jubilant over the progress the Hawaiian units were making. Throckmorton crossed his fingers and added:

"Things are going damn good. I hate to say it because we may be kicked back tomorrow, but we've got the enemy rolling. He is losing his communications and we are pressing him."

As Thurston and I started back along the road, we came upon a column of marines preceded by three tanks.

Some of the leathernecks were riding the tanks, others were slogging in time-honored doughfoot fashion along the side of the road.

It was a long trip just to deliver lunch. But Throckmorton and all the others with him deserve all the favors anyone can do them.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an article from the Honolulu Star-Bulletin of August 11, 1950, relative to Marines who have been activated in Hawaii to participate in the Korean situation.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OAHU MEN LEAVING TODAY, SATURDAY—200 ACTIVATED MARINE RESERVES GOING TO CALIFORNIA FOR DUTY

Hawaii's activated Marine Corps Reservists are heading for the mainland today and Saturday—for the second time in 6 weeks.

Company D, Thirteenth Infantry Battalion, which reported for active duty last Friday, received orders Thursday to leave for the west coast, according to a Pacific Fleet Marine Force spokesman.

About 100 men are to leave today abroad two planes. Another group of about 100 will leave by plane Saturday.

Some members of the company, which had a total strength of about 250, have been assigned to duty here.

GOING TO CALIFORNIA

The group of 200 is presumably going to Camp Pendleton, Calif., for further training. Less than 2 months ago, Company D completed a 2-week training period there.

How long the men will be in training this time was not disclosed, nor was it known here whether the marines will return to Hawaii after their training, either individually or as a unit.

It is expected the company may be split up and assigned to regular Marine Corps units.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Also, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an editorial which appeared in the Washington Evening Star of August 12, 1950, entitled "We Need These Two States."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE NEED THESE TWO STATES

While there is some doubt whether the Eighty-first Congress will approve statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, there is no doubt whatsoever that such approval would be given if the Senate gets a chance to vote on the two bills now pending.

The House has approved these bills by large majorities. Unlike the situation which prevailed in the Eightieth Congress, when the bills were bottled up in the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, both bills have received the approval of that committee this time and are on the Senate Calendar. Whether they will be taken up depends on Senate leadership, and the decision there will rest on whether taking them up threatens too long a delay enforced by a minority of opponents.

It seems to the Star that everything that can be done should be done to get these bills up in the Senate and to obtain the vote which will eliminate the last barrier to statehood for these Territories, ready, anxious, and able to become full-fledged members of the Union. The opposition to statehood does not stand up against the affirmative evidence gathered in countless investigations, and the distinguished array of opinion lined up in favor of statehood. The opposition is based on fears which are not sustained by demonstrable facts and on considerations that have become outdated with time—such as "noncontiguity" and the lack of means of self-support. As for equality of representation in the Senate, that question was disposed of when our Constitution was adopted.

The consideration that ought to prevail is whether statehood for these Territories would benefit the United States. The committees of Congress which have studied that question and the House of Representatives, supported by the opinions of the President and the Departments of Defense, State, and Interior, all say that it would. There is greater unanimity of opinion now than ever before, more substantial support than ever before, and failure to bring the matter to a vote in the Senate at this session will mean an altogether unreasonable delay in taking the step that should be taken now.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator from California think the Congress has had sufficient opportunity to become acquainted with the Hawaiian statehood proposal?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I certainly think it has had more than ample time to become acquainted with the needs of Hawaiian statehood.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator is familiar with the hearings which have many times been held in the Senate, is he not?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am thoroughly familiar with them, and I think it will be most unfortunate if the Eighty-first Congress adjourns without taking definite action in support of statehood for the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator feel that the hearings which the Senate held on both Hawaiian and Alaskan statehood were open and that there was sufficient opportunity given for discussion there?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I attended both hearings. I testified in favor of Hawaiian and Alaskan statehood. I think there was ample time given for those who were interested, either pro or con, to make their views known, and the committee, in its judgment—and I think correctly—reported the bills to the Senate. I certainly believe that the people of the United States, and certainly the people of those two organized Territories, the House having already acted, have a right to expect action by the Senate before this session adjourns.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator from California believe, knowing the full hearings as he does, that statehood for Hawaii could come at any better time for the benefit of the United States?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may say to the Senator from New Mexico that Hawaii has a great contribution it can make to the serious situation in the Pacific. I think the Hawaiian people can help us understand the far eastern situation, and, in turn, can help to interpret to the people of the Far East the aspirations and hopes and desires of America for free institutions. I think the admission of Hawaii as one of our States would be one of the greatest contributions we could make to the peace of the world and the understanding between the people of this country and the Far East.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator from California likewise believe that the admission of Alaska would have a very beneficial effect on the part of the world where that action would be regarded as symbolical?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from New Mexico. I think it is vital that Alaska become an integral part of the American Union and that we serve notice on the Soviet Union and all other powers that it is a part and parcel of the United States which we will defend in the same way that we will defend any of the 48 States now in the Union. I think the sooner we draw that line of demarcation and make it clear that our original promises of statehood are going to be carried out the better it will be for all concerned.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator agree with me that if we had never even made a promise, it would be most desirable to admit both Hawaii and Alaska?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may say to the Senator from New Mexico that the only reason for creating organized Territories is that they may go through an apprenticeship to become States. If we did not intend that both Alaska and Hawaii should become States, they should not have been organized Territories. Certainly I think there has been ample evidence given to justify quick and affirmative action by the Congress of the United States.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hendrickson	Morse
Anderson	Hickenlooper	Mundt
Benton	Hill	Murray
Brewster	Hoey	Myers
Bricker	Holland	Neely

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDERSON in the chair). A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, for the information of Senators who were not present when the amendment was presented, I wish to repeat what I said, that it is a provision which was in the OPA law during the last war, inserted at that time to accompany a provision that farm prices could not be rolled back below a given level. It is intended primarily to protect farmers who grow vegetables to be canned, and to provide a market for a product which cannot be preserved, which has a short growing season, which must go to the canner when it gets ripe. If some OPA administrator should fix a price on the processor which for the industry—and for that purpose the word "generally" is used—would not yield the particular industry a fair and equitable profit, the processor would not buy the farmer's product.

The provision was in the last OPA law, and it is copied word for word from the bill which the House passed. It is a companion measure for the general farm measure.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Would it not apply to every processor who processed something from an animal? Would it not apply to the hide manufacturers? The Senator knows hide prices have gone very high. Is not this a very far-reaching amendment, covering every byproduct of an animal? I was so advised.

As the Senator said, A similar provision was in the last OPA law. With deep respect for the Senator from Virginia, who has done bo much for the bill, let me say that the great fear I have is that if we undertake to legislate OPA regulations on the Senate floor we will never get anything. The provision is in the House text, it will go to conference, the Senate will have to approve the conference report, and if we write the same language that is found in the House text, it might entail a little delay in agreeing to the conference report and enacting the bill.

I favor everyone receiving a fair profit, but I have conferred with experts and find that the proposal would effect pharmaceutical products, hides, and other items. As the Senator so ably stated, one of the great troubles that afflict us is that the prices charged by those in the leather business have been going up far beyond what they should be. I believe, as I have said, in fair prices being paid, and fair profits being received, but I do not believe we should legislate a whole OPA program on the Senate floor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The amendment does not go any further than the last OPA law went.

Mr. MAYBANK. And the OPA regulations?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I recall no trouble occurring during the last war because of this provision. While it is true the matter would be in conference, because the House has adopted the provision, I think it is also true that from a percentage standpoint there are as many friends of the farmer in the Senate as there are in the House, and, frankly, I would like to go on record as being a friend of the farmer.

Mr. MAYBANK. I think the Senator will bear me out in the statement that the farmer has no better friends than he and I and many other Senators. But the proposal goes beyond the farmer. It takes in the drug manufacturer and all others connected with the business.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It affects only farm products, and if it affects only farm products it does not go beyond the farmer.

Mr. MAYBANK. Wood and trees are farm products. How would it affect lumber? I cannot find out for certain how it would affect lumber.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the amendment reads as follows:

That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing.

In the first place, that covers not only the packer, but as I read the amendment it covers every other processor, the man who tans the hides, the man who makes shoes, it covers everyone engaged in processing of all agricultural products. I cannot see how the Senator can talk about it as having something to do only with livestock. Is it not inevitable, from a reading of the language, to conclude that it covers every processor?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think it could do so. But I said it was submitted primarily to protect farmers who raise vegetables to be canned. That is the segment of the farmers now concerned, because if a price is put on the canner which denies to him a generally fair and equitable profit, he will quit canning, and the farmer who raises his vegetables to be canned will take a loss. There is nothing in the law to protect him.

Mr. TAFT. I do not say I am against the amendment. I am only trying to point out that we are legislating on something that has not been considered or discussed.

In the typewritten copy of the amendment will be found the additional language:

In establishing and providing a ceiling, a generally fair and equitable margin of profit shall be allowed for such processing.

Does that mean a profit for each processor?

Mr. ROBERTSON. No; as I construe the language it means in the case of the industry engaged in canning peas allowance will be made for that particular industry, or if they are canning corn or beans, or whatever they are canning, that segment would get generally whatever the main industry receives. We cannot pick them out individually. That is quite impossible, as the Senator pointed out so well on yesterday.

Mr. TAFT. Yesterday we adopted an amendment which set a profit on the average of the industry. The Senator does not say anything about the average of the industry. It could be interpreted to mean a profit for every single processor, no matter how inefficient he might be. I wonder if that is what the Senator meant when he used this language.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not mean that, and I do not think it can be construed that way. I was told it was taken from the OPA law, and it is certainly bottomed on the bill passed by the House.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot find such a provision in the House language. I wonder if the Senator can refer me to the OPA law.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I checked it with Mr. Boots, of our drafting service, this morning and he told me, as I understood him to say, that the provision was in the Stabilization Act of 1942.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator yield to me to make a statement?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to say in respect to the statements made by the distinguished Senators from Virginia and Ohio that I talked with Mr. Trigg and other officials of the Department of Agriculture today. They said they were very much concerned about the language of a House provision, for they do not know to what it applies. It would apply to everything, the way they construe it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has not confused my amendment with the amendment that was offered by Representative STANLEY of Virginia to protect tobacco. The Department of Agriculture says they do not know to what that amendment applies; that it goes far beyond tobacco, and that they were going to send up a substitute for it.

Mr. MAYBANK. They have given me a substitute for that amendment so that it may be discussed. But the amendment the Senator from Ohio has read applies to everything processed from agriculture or agricultural commodities, from trees, or from drugs, or from anything else. That is the way they interpret it.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think there is any other interpretation possible with respect to leather. I do not object to the scope of it. Only here we would lay down one standard of profit. Yesterday we laid down another standard of profit in all packing industries—at least, those packing beef or sheep or hogs. The bill itself contains a wholly vague standard. It seems to me that if we are going to have this kind of a law, and if we are going to try to prescribe standard margins, cost plus a profit, or whatever it is, it ought to be uniform and it ought to be worked out with the committee. There should not be adopted here offhand provisions applying three or four different standards to three or four industries.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I heard the Senator's speech yesterday, and to make sure that I understood it I read it again this morning. I want to call to the attention of the Senator from Ohio that in the OPA law in the last war, and the Senate substitute now before us, all through, while we referred to a margin of profit, we used the same term, "fair and equitable." Those are the words we use here. Those are the words we use wherever we refer to profits anywhere in the bill—"fair and equitable." As I understand, the only reason some of the canners wanted this amendment was that we put a floor under the prices of the farmers. We cannot roll them back below parity, and we cannot roll them back below the highest figure between May 24 and June 24. If the farmer has that price, but the canner cannot get a fair and equitable profit, as I have stated, he will not buy, and the farmer then is left holding the bag. I believe the amendment may be very broad in its application. Yet I am told that either in the law during World War II or in the regulations this exact language was used and interpreted, and that we did not have all the terrible consequences which it is now suggested may happen.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. First, let me say that I shall vote for the Senator's amendment. However, yesterday we turned down an amendment I offered which would do exactly what the Senator's amendment would do, except that it provided for fair and equitable treatment to everyone in the United States. My amendment read:

No ceiling shall be established on any commodity or material which does not allow for a reasonable gross margin of profit.

Not a net profit, but a gross profit, to the industries or groups affected. That is certainly what the amendment of the Senator from Virginia does.

Mr. ROBERTSON. With all due deference, I think the amendment is different from the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, because as I interpret his amendment, and according to the best advice I could receive, his amendment went down to the retail level.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is not true.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is the way I construed it, and that is the way others construed it.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am going to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia because I think it is a good amendment; because I believe it applies to everything the able Senator from Ohio said it applied to. My amendment simply provided: "No ceiling shall be established which does not show a fair margin of gross profit." I think it is a good amendment.

I want to say, Mr. President, that we might as well accept all these amendments. It does not make any difference, because title IV which has to do with price control and rationing and wage controls, is such a big subject, and so broad that when we get through adopting title IV we are going to have to go back and write a new law anyway. I do not know why we spend time on title IV. I do not know why all amendments that are offered to it are not accepted, because when we get through it is not going to be workable, even if we adopt all the amendments which are offered to it.

Mr. TAFT. If I have a correct copy of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, it goes on to provide that "nothing in this act shall be construed as either eliminating or restricting the use of trade and brand names."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I explained this morning that after offering the first part of this as a printed amendment I then heard the proposal made on yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Indiana that the rest of this language ought to be included. But when I reached the floor this morning I looked over some of the amendments which had been offered, and I found that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] had pending an amendment which covers everything that is in the second paragraph of the typewritten sheet from which the senior Senator from Ohio is reading. I have just talked with the Parliamentarian, who has been looking at the act, and he says I am correct in saying that the language I proposed in this amendment was actually written into the OPA law.

Mr. TAFT. Let me ask what year it was. I have about six different amendments; the law was almost constantly changed. I do not find it in the 1942 law.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The drafting clerk showed the amendment to me this morning. It is in the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, I now find. I knew I had read it.

Mr. TAFT. It is toward the end of the 1942 act, is it not?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is on page 39 of the pamphlet entitled "Price Control Laws and Executive Orders, as Amended, August 1946."

Mr. TAFT. What paragraph is it?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is near the middle of the page.

Mr. TAFT. Is it section 2, with a small letter to indicate a subdivision of that section?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is called the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended; and in the pamphlet which I have before me it appears on page 39, and reads as follows:

Provided further, That in the fixing of maximum prices on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestcok, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing: Provided further, That in fixing price maximums for agricultural commodities and for commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity, as provided for by this act, adequate weighting shall be given to farm labor.

I did not include the farm-labor weighting provision in my amendment; I included the first part of the language I have just read.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. This is the amendment which, as I said in the course of the debate yesterday, is the one I had hoped to have offered for the consideration of the Senate. Now it has been offered, and I expect to support it.

It is a fact, is it not, that this language was used many, many times very advantageously when processors of agricultural products as a group came to the Special Committee on Small Business and requested the level of profits which we talked about yesterday?

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. However, the Senator from Ohio has raised a very important question, namely, whether the profit should be figured on the basis of the groups of persons involved. The only ones we ever considered were the complete groups of processors, in connection with establishing the fair-margin-of-profit level. Certainly such a provision did not mean to those of us engaged in the activities of the Special Committee on Small Business that every processor would be guaranteed a fair margin of profit.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Of course not.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly it does not guarantee a profit to one who is inefficient. To the contrary, this provision was construed on the basis of groups; that is the way we handled such matters in the course of our experience while serving on the Special Committee on Small Business.

I am quite satisfied that in the butter business or other dairy products businesses and in connection with canning factories, and so forth, this amendment will be very helpful.

The livestock amendment offered yesterday specifically provides that the persons involved shall be considered by groups. That was the point the distinguished Senator from Virginia raised with me.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. It calls for taking them by groups. However, that language is not included in this amendment. I do not know whether it is needed. I think the legislative history should show that it is not the intention of the Senate to pass a measure which will guarantee an inefficient processor a fair margin of profit, but that, to the contrary, the intention of the Senate is to have them taken as a group.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I absolutely agree that there is no intention of trying to do the impossible, namely, to give a reasonable profit to poor management. Of course that is impossible.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBERTSON. But the language of the amendment is the same as that used in the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended; and therefore I thought the prudent thing to do was to use it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am very glad to hear the distinguished Senator from Virginia make the statement he has just made. Now that he has made that statement, I feel much more reassured in regard to accepting the amendment and taking it to conference, for, as the Senator from Ohio has said, the amendment will not mean that a fair or reasonable margin of profit will be guaranteed to everyone—for instance, to a manufacturer of hides——

Mr. TAFT. Or to a shoe manufacturer.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. In individual cases, the amendment would not require that a profit be guaranteed. If the amendment is applied to groups, I shall not oppose it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is an agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator accept, as a modification of his amendment, the following provision:

No ceiling for any material, service, or property shall be established or maintained which is designed to allow any seller a margin of profit greater than his normal margin of profit on sales of such material, service, or property.

I have read the amendment which guarantees a normal margin of profit; and it seems to me that as of the date when the freeze was made, the operator might be enjoying a greater-than-usual margin of profit, although of course it would be possible for the reverse to be the case, namely, for the operator to be having a smaller profit than usual. So it seems to me that if we are to guard against one, we should guard against the other.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, with all due deference to the Senator from Delaware, I think his amendment should be offered to the part of this measure relating to a fair profit, and should not be offered to this amendment.

I am sorry that I cannot accept his amendment to this one.

The amendment I have offered contains the exact language of the House bill, and also the language is copied from the former act. I prefer to stick by this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I may say that the legislative counsel had in mind that the amendment would be offered on page 43, in line 21. However, I think it is essential that it be put in the same bill, because this matter could work both ways.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It might be well to put the amendment in the same bill, but not in the same section with my amendment.

The amendment of the Senator from Delaware is prepared in respect to a different section of the bill. With all due deference to him, I think that is where his amendment should be offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; I shall offer the amendment later.

Mr. MAYBANK. I assume that the Senator from Virginia was discussing the language on page 43, where the following appears:

Any regulations or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I shall offer the amendment later. In the meantime, Mr. President, I withhold my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 43, in line 21, after the period it is proposed to insert the following:

No ceiling for any material, service, or property shall be established or maintained which is designed to allow any seller a margin of profit greater than his normal margin of profit on sales of such material, service, or property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I may say that the purpose of the amendment is to guard against a situation where the period selected for the freezing of prices would be one in which the processor was enjoying a greater-than-usual margin of profit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 57, between lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 410. Each contract providing for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys by any department or agency of the United States from any contractor, entered into at any time when ceiling prices are in effect under this act for whichever of such fowl is covered by such contract, shall contain the following provision (with such change as may be necessary to describe the fowl covered by the contract):

"The contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for live chickens or live turkeys to be processed hereunder. In the event and to the extent that the actual price paid to the producers of live chickens or live turkeys purchased for the performance of this contract is less than such estimated price, the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents or fraction thereof, per pound."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this amendment merely provides that in the event ceiling prices are imposed upon poultry products, if the Government is purchasing such poultry for its own use and paying the ceiling price, then in turn the processors must pay to the farmers a ceiling price for the live product.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. In the event the processor buys the poultry from the farmer at lower than the ceiling price, the saving must be passed on to the Government; in other words, he cannot put it into his pocket.

I may say that this clause, which is supposed to be put into the contract, was in all the Government contracts during the last war, except that, during the last war, the clause merely carried the proviso that the Government could claim the money at any time within a 60-day period, and that if it did not claim the money within the 60-day period it forfeited the right to claim it. The facts are that the Government did not claim any of the money, and that the farmers sold their products at below the ceiling in several instances, but there was no penalty provision in the act to cover it. This amendment makes such transactions subject to the same penalty provisions, by incorporating it into the bill instead of incorporating it into a regulation, as was done before.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. It would be up to the Administrator then, would it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment was incorporated in War Food Order No. 19 during the last war. It was not enforced, but it was incorporated in all the regulations and orders; but the farmers were not protected. This would give to the farmers the protection that the administration during the last war said it was intended they should have.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am a friend of the farmers of the Nation, as is the Senator from Delaware, and I should like to have the meaning of the amendment made clear. If a processor has a Government contract and he buys chickens, turkeys, or other poultry——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he buys at 3 cents below the ceiling, he must sell to the Government likewise.

Mr. MAYBANK. He bases his sales on parity, does he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. He must refund to the farmer, must he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He must either refund to the farmer or refund to the Government; he cannot put it into his pocket.

Mr. MAYBANK. In other words, he cannot take advantage of the 3-cent differential, or whatever the differential may be, from the farmer or from the Government, and put it into his own pocket; is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. He must refund it to one or the other, must he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct. In the bill he is guaranteed a margin of profit. This simply says he cannot take advantage of the farmer.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I think this is a good amendment and should be adopted.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPEHART. I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, line 9, after the word "terminate", it is proposed to strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert "August 31, 1951."

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, that simply makes this bill for 1 year instead of 2. I think the date is exactly the same as the date in the House bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Indiana is a distinguished member of the committee and a hard worker.

It was hoped by the committee that we could extend this bill for 2 years. The House has extended it for 1 year, but the Senate has put into the bill two amendments, one by the Senator from Vermont and myself, which was recommended by the Grange, which gives the right to eliminate any part of this bill upon 48 hours' notice, with the Congress voting it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I am going to withdraw the amendment temporarily. I ask unanimous consent that I may do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish the Senator would not withdraw the amendment, though of course he has that right if there is no objection.

Mr. CAPEHART. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, may I complete my remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely want to say that the House provided 1 year, but General Bradley, Chairman Symington, and others pleaded with the committee to make it 2 years, because it would take quite a while before it could be placed in operation. Furthermore, we do not know when it is going to become a law. We put safeguards in the bill permitting the Congress to repeal the law at any time it got ready. We put further safeguards in the bill as recommended by the farm organizations and other organizations, and any title in the bill can be repealed by a joint resolution of the Congress. I merely wanted the RECORD to show that, because I am hopeful the Senate will maintain the 2-year provision.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement. I have not been in the Senate Chamber too much during the debate, but I notice certain amendments are being adopted. It seems to me we ought to be very careful, and that amendments ought to be debated rather thoroughly. Members of the Committee on Banking and Currency ought to agree upon an amendment before accepting it. I say that regardless of what kind of amendment it is.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. In a moment. If we are not extremely careful, we are going to end by having an OPA bill written on the floor of the Senate. I do not think anyone wants that kind of bill. Various Senators are proposing amendments, trying to protect some particular commodity. I do not think the President of the United States wants that. The President did not ask for it in his message to the Congress, and I sincerely hope that the Banking and Currency Committee will resist all the amendments that its members do not conscientiously believe will aid the fundamental principles which have been laid down in the President's message, and the request that was made by him when he sent his bill to the Congress.

When I look over these amendments and when I see what is going on, I am fearful that we are going to wind up with a bill which no one will understand, and that it will be so confused, if we are not careful, that someone is going to ask someone else what it all means. We may wind up, as I said yesterday, with a motion to recommit. If we do, there is a possibility that such a motion might be agreed to. I am not criticizing anyone;

I am merely making a request. I know the chairman and other members of the committee will watch it to see that it is done, and that no amendment which really does not belong in the bill is placed in it, at least unless it is debated and unless a vote is taken upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Illinois, to put his mind at ease, that the amendment which was adopted a few moments ago does not protect any special group, but, had it been enforced during the last war, we would have saved the Government or the farmers of the Del-Mar Peninsular, alone, more than $10,000,000. I have the figures in my office. The amendment was designed to protect the farmer, so that he will get what he is entitled to.

Mr. LUCAS. It might be that the Senator's amendment would be satisfactory to everyone. It may be that it will do exactly what it proposes. But the Senator did not present his amendment before the committee, though the committee was in session for some time. I have found that amendments which are offered upon the floor without consideration require, as a general rule, some supervision and careful study. That is all I am talking about. I did not even have the Senator's amendment in mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand.

Mr. LUCAS. I merely rose to make a general statement in respect to an important piece of legislation, which we should pass as quickly as possible, and with as few amendments as possible, so that we can get it on to the White House. The President did not ask for very much, as I see it, and yet, if we are not careful, and if I read some of these amendments correctly, before we get through we are going to give him something that is going to be almost impossible of administration. That is what is worrying me a little in respect to this bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, again I am forced to invite the attention of the Senate, for the RECORD, to the fact that no hearings were held on title IV. We are now talking about title IV. The majority leader stated a moment ago that the able Senator from Delaware had not offered his amendment to the committee. He had no opportunity to offer it. The hearings which were held on this particular title were held in executive session. There was no public hearing, and no one knew anything about it, other than the members of the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to say to my friend from Indiana that there were no hearings held on any section or any subsection. There were hearings held on the general over-all bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. The original bill on which public hearings were held did not contain titles IV and V.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. The hearings brought forth titles IV and V.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, at this time I call up my amendment A, dated July 14, 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is offered on behalf of myself and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL].

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 76, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

(e) Chapter 15 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 292. Whoever, being an officer or empoyee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives or of the Armed Forces of the United States), shall speculate directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or shall knowingly publish or disclose any information designated by the President as confidential for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both. As used in this section, the term 'speculate' shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity. The President shall designate as confidential any information which would give any person an undue advantage in trading on any commodity exchange." Notwithstanding the provisions of section 716 of this act, this subsection shall continue in effect after June 30, 1952.

On page 82, line 9, after the word "shall", insert a comma and the following: "except as otherwise provided."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the distinguished Senator from Delaware. Any man who would come to the Congress of the United States and take an oath to support the Constitution of this country, and then gamble on the commodity exchange, ought to be put in jail. I hope every such person will be put in jail. But the Committee on Banking and Currency should not interfere with the duties of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the distinguished present Presiding Officer [Mr. HOEY] is a member, or with the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is chairman, and put into effect penalties which run beyond the life of the control bill. I think if that is done we shall make a mistake. With all due respect to the distinguished Senator from Delaware, his Republican colleagues will agree that we decided not to go beyond our jurisdiction. I would support such an amendment if it came from the Judiciary Committee or from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am in thorough accord with the sentiments and thoughts of the Senator from Delaware, but I do not think this is the appropriate place for his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is not a single bill which could be placed before us as to which this amendment would be more appropriate. We are placing in the hands of departments in Washington, upon recommendation of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, the power to limit and control the commodity markets. It is very easy for any man having access to the information to make an unlimited amount of money. I am not condemning the operations of the commodity exchanges as such. For 25 years, before I came to the Senate, I made my living in the grain business and have operated at various times on commodity exchanges. It is a part of a legitimate transaction. But it is not a part of the work of a Member of Congress or of a Government employee who is in any position to shape policies and make decisions which will affect the commodity markets. Any Member of Congress or any Government employee who accepts his job should separate himself from operations in those markets. If he is not willing to separate himself from such speculations, he should resign his position.

No Member of the Senate is more violently opposed to unnecessary controls than I am, but I endorsed the proposed legislation and I intend to support the giving of the President the necessary powers which I think he needs in order to cope with the situation. I shall not vote for any bill which gives to any bureau in Washington the power to regulate markets when, at the same time, by declining to accept this amendment, we tell them we are going to criticize them if they use this information in order to make money, but that it is not a violation of the law, and they may go ahead, but do not let us find out about it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is such speculation not now a violation of the law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not now a violation of the law for a man to speculate. I am not a lawyer. But if it is a violation of the law, we are spelling it out in this amendment. My understanding from the legislative counsel is that any Member of Congress or an employee of any Government department can speculate without violating the law. Instances of speculation were brought to the attention of the Senate during the last war, but there was absolutely nothing done about it. If it was a violation of the law, why was not something done about it? In this bill there is a provision that if a housewife buys illegally 5 pounds of sugar, the merchant who sells it can go to jail, but if a Member of Congress speculates and makes a fortune he can get away with it. I shall not support any such proposed legislation as that. This amendment, in my opinion, is the most important one that can be offered to the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Would this amendment in any way, directly or indirectly, affect the sections of which the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had charge?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not to my knowledge. It would not affect them in any manner whatsoever.

Mr. MAYBANK. Can the Senator assure us that it would have no effect upon the regulation of commodity exchanges?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has no effect on the regulation of commodity exchanges such as was proposed in the original bill. It does not refer to them at all.

Mr. MAYBANK. This amendment goes far beyond the life of the bill, does it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It expires June 30, 1952. Frankly, I think it should go beyond the life of the bill, but I made the termination of it the same as that of the bill. If we are to grant extraordinary power to regulate commodity markets, we have no other alternative than to restrict their operation.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall join the Senator in an effort to put any Government employee or anyone else in jail who gambles on the exchanges, but his amendment provides as follows:

Nothwithstanding the provisions of section 716 of this act, this subsection shall continue in effect after June 30, 1952.

I want to know the reason for going that far. I am willing to make it permanent, but I want to know the reason for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it should be made permanent, but I should be willing to terminate it with the expiration of the life of the bill, provided it runs as long as the bill is in effect. I think it should be in effect at all times.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I want the Senator from Delaware to understand that no one is more in accord with his ideas on this question than I am, but I thought it might be something which intruded on the legislative authority of the Judiciary Committee or the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That was the reason for my remarks. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to have the amendment go beyond the scope of the bill, provided it does not interfere with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In just a moment.

Mr. President, I should like to modify my amendment, on page 2——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I am not asking the Senator to modify his amendment. I wanted the RECORD to show that in going beyond the scope of the bill it would not take jurisdiction from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I modify my amendment to make the termination date in it to read same as the termination date in the bill.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In so doing, I should like to have it understood that I am endorsing the principle that the bill should cease to be effective at that time, but I recognize the fact that permanent legislation will come from another committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. I will join the Senator in permanent legislation.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware refers to a person in an official position who secures confidential information on prices which might be controlled or regulations which may affect prices, and has nothing to do with the substantive legislation with which we are dealing.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I understand the theory of the amendment is that, under existing law, employees in the marketing and agreement divisions of the Department of Agriculture are prohibited from speculating on commodity exchanges because of access to confidential information as to what regulations and quotas are to be imposed, which would affect the market.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We have pending before us now a bill which will confer that power upon the Secretary of Agriculture, and no one knows who will get the confidential information. Therefore the Senator would like to have the law applied to everyone?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want the law to apply to everyone in an official capacity in a department, and to anyone, including Members of Congress, who are in a position to dictate the policies of a department.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The termination date is limited to the date in the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the termination date of the amendment is the same as the termination date of the bill. I modified my amendment accordingly in order to overcome the objection of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK].

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to say to my friend it was called to my attention by the legislative counsel that the amendment went beyond the date of the bill, and I was fearful the Committee on Banking and Currency would be taking over jurisdiction of permanent legislation on the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have modified my amendment to make the termination date read the same as the termination date in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 76, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert:

(e) Section 284 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Whoever, having been employed in any department or agency of the United States (including the Armed Forces of the United States), within 2 years after negotiating or participating in the negotiation of any contract on behalf of the United States or any department or agency thereof, shall accept employment with any other party to such contract shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

Notwithstanding the provisions of section 716 of this act, this subsection shall continue in effect after June 30, 1952.

On page 82, line 9, after the word "shall", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words, "except as otherwise provided."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to modify the amendment in the same way I modified the previous amendment, to make the expiration date in the amendment conform to the expiration date in the bill itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator modifies his amendment accordingly.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I appreciate that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and the other members of the Committee on Banking and Currency were present at the hearing, but how would this affect, for instance, those who Secretary Sawyer suggested should be given certain freedom from double-compensation laws, such as dollar-a-year men, and others?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is my opinion, Mr. President, that this amendment would not affect the dollar-a-year men except in this manner——

Mr. MAYBANK. How would it affect the men who would give up their positions in industry?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if X corporation loaned one of its officials to the Government during an emergency for $1 a year in order to have that official not bar himself from going back to X corporation at the expiration of his service with the Government, all he would have to do during his service with the Government would be to disqualify himself from rendering any opinion or helping to formulate the terms of any contract which his company is negotiating with the Government. He would be in the position of a judge on a bench who disqualifies himself in a case or in the rendering of a decision.

Mr. MAYBANK. We sat in hearings and we tried to write a law which would give Secretary Sawyer voluntary controls. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], and I were impressed by the fact that it was necessary to obtain good men for the Government service. We did not want civil-service employees to be transferred from one department to another. If this amendment does not affect the good men whom we would expect the Secretary to bring to Washington, I would have no objection to the amendment, but I am fearful that under the amendment he would not be able to get the type of men needed in an emergency.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Would this amendment, in the judgment of the Senator from Delaware, prevent Secretary Sawyer, for instance, from taking employment as an attorney representing a company with which he had been dealing as Secretary of Commerce in entering into a contract under the bill for the purpose of carrying out the President's program of allocation, procurement, making of contracts, setting priorities, and the like?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If Secretary Sawyer were associated with X corporation on the outside, when the corporation came before the Government to negotiate a contract, the Secretary would have to disqualify himself.

Mr. BRICKER. Assuming he had not been associated with any corporation on the outside, let us assume that as Secretary he enters into a contract with a corporation. Would he be prohibted for 2 years from accepting employment with that corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct. Perhaps in some cases a certain amount of hardship would be involved. On the other hand, we have had several instances pointed out of employment by certain corporations which had the appearance of being pay-offs. There was not so long ago the case of an RFC official, shortly after the Waltham Watch Co. had obtained a sizable loan from the RFC, obtaining employment with the Waltham Watch Co. at a substantially higher salary than he had been getting with RFC. Conceivably there could be nothing wrong with such a situation. However, it is best that any question in that respect be removed. It is simply one of the penalties a man must pay for service to his country.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I dislike very much to say that I shall have to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware because it includes the Armed Forces of the United States. A man serving in the Armed Forces of the United States may be about ready to retire, and when he retires he must still make a living, and he may need a job.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to point out to the Senator from Indiana that no man serving in the Armed Forces would be in a position of negotiating a contract.

Mr. CAPEHART. It would include thousands of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A man serving in the field would have nothing to do with it. If there are thousands of them, they should be included. I have sat on investigating committees, and I know of an instance where a man was prosecuted under similar circumstances. I think the chairman of the committee was the Senator from Michigan. This amendment would prevent a man from taking a Government position and negotiating a contract either with himself or with his firm.

Mr. CAPEHART. I know the problem that is involved when a nation is at war. Certainly we are at war, and we may be in total war before the bill expires. The problem of Government is to get men to do the things that must be done. No man would accept employment temporarily with the Government during a war period if after the war ends or his service ends with the Government he cannot obtain a job with someone with whom he may have come in contact during his employment with the Government. He simply would not do it. He would not take the Government job. I know what the Senator from Delaware is attempting to do, and I think what he is trying to do has considerable merit. However, I shall have to oppose the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator think that when a man comes to Washington and takes employment with the Government the very least he should do is dissociate himself from his own contracts?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes; however, the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware does not cover that point. It says that within 2 years after he leaves his service with the Government, he cannot take employment with anyone with whom he came in contact as an employee of the Government. We could not get people to accept employment with the Government under those conditions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to point out to the Senator from Indiana the fact that at the bottom of page 1, and going over on to page 2, the amendment provides that it shall apply only to those who within 2 years after negotiating or participating in the negotiation of a contract take employment with companies having to do with the contracts. This does not say with whom the man comes in contact, or with whom he discusses any related contract. It relates to negotiating or participating in the negotiation of a contract. All any dollar-a-year man would have to do would be to dissociate himself from negotiating or participating in the negotiation of a contract.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I know exactly what the Senator is seeking, and I am in sympathy with it. He is trying to eliminate men coming to Washington and working for the Government and taking advantage of their employment either to make money while they are working for the Government or when they leave the Government employment. But I shall have to be opposed to the amendment because I do not see how it would be possible to get a sufficient number of good men in the United States to run the Government, particularly if we have an all-out war, as was the case in World War II, and which we may have in the present instance, though I hope we may not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no intention of handicapping the work of the Government, and if I felt this amendment would have any such result, I would withdraw it. My only thought is that any man working for the Government should dissociate himself from negotiating a contract with his own concern.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is not what the amendment says.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or obtaining employment with a concern with which he has negotiated a contract.

Mr. CAPEHART. The amendment is directed to 2 years after the man leaves Government employment, not 2 years prior to or 2 years during his employment. The amendment applies only after he leaves the employ of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We could not prevent a man from taking employment if he had worked for a corporation 2 years prior, but we can prohibit him from obtaining employment 2 years following the war.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. I am not concerned alone with those who are brought into the service of the Government on a dollar-a-year basis. I am concerned with the regular employees of the Government, the members of the Cabinet, the members of various administrative boards which would be created under the bill, and the like, who would be dealing with business extensively throughout the country, with all the steel corporations, with the oil companies, and with the communication and transportation companies. If they had anything to do with the negotiation of a contract during the period of their employment, when they were on the Government payroll, they would be restricted, under penalty of a heavy fine and jail sentence, if they accepted employment within 2 years after they left the service of the Government, regardless of the kind or character of service they rendered while on the Government payroll. I think that is going entirely too far in a bill of this kind.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I might mention one company, the Cadillac Co. Suppose the Government needed a man to negotiate a contract covering the price of tanks, or the like, and the man took employment with the Government. Such a man could not work for that company for 2 years after he left the Government service. I do not see how we could obtain men to work for the Government if they were forbidden to work for a company after severing their connection with the Government.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. There are only only a few who would take advantage of their services with the Government to secure personal advantage afterward. There might be a few, but 99 out of 100 of the employees who would enter the Government service, or who are now working for the Government and will be associated with the program, are entirely patriotic and honest, and would not do anything to the detriment of their Government. I think it would be unfair to penalize a great number of honest employees who do conscientious and patriotic work by preventing their further employment with a great segment of American industry; and this amendment would cover a great deal of American industry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is no disagreement about what we are trying to accomplish. I have no intention in the world of penalizing men who are coming into the Government service on a temporary basis, and I have no recollection at this moment of a single instance in which such men have been criticized for what they have done while in the Government service.

Since there seems to be no disagreement as to the purpose of the amendment, I shall withdraw it temporarily, and will consult with the legislative counsel to see if we cannot draft an amendment which will take care of what we are all trying to achieve, and at the same time not penalize anyone who desires to serve his country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his amendment. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a new title to the pending bill in behalf of myself and the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], together with other amendments, and ask that they lie on the table to be brought up later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

S. 3613. An act for the relief of certain Chinese stewards of the United States Navy;

S. 3614. An act for the relief of John B. Underwood, Jr., TMC, United States Navy; and

S. 3709. An act for the relief of certain disbursing officers and former disbursing officers of the naval service, and for other purposes.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I wish to call up my amendment "Q."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to delete lines 7 and 8 on page 68 and to insert the following on page 72, after line 18:

All litigation arising under this act or the regulations promulgated thereunder, shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. The Senator from Ohio and I discussed yesterday several of his amendments, and last evening, in his absence, the Senate agreed on two which he authorized me to bring up. I think there are one or two more to which we will have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I should now like to call up amendment "J."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, line 18, it is proposed to insert the following subsections:

(h) The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act.

(i) Nothing in this act shall be construed (1) as authorizing the elimination or any restriction of the use of trade and brand names; (2) as authorizing the President to require the grade labeling of any materials or property; (3) as authorizing the President to standardize any materials, services, or property, unless the President shall determine, with respect to such standardization, that no practicable alternative exists for securing effective price control with respect to such materials, services, or property; or (4) as authorizing any order of the President establishing price ceilings for different kinds, classes, or types of material, service, or property which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use in the trade or industry affected, or have previously been promulgated and their use lawfully required by another Government agency.

(j) No rule, regulation, order, or price schedule issued under this act shall require any seller of materials or property at retail or any operator of any service establishment to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

Mr. BRICKER obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there is one section of the amendment which I shall have to discuss with him at a little length. Referring to line 1, on page 2, I presume the Senator intends to refer to "title" instead of "act."

Mr. BRICKER. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. When the Senator gets through explaining the amendment, I may have something to say about it, but with three-fourths of it I am in accord.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, the language of the amendment is almost self-explanatory. The amendment is is directed to the protection of the conduct of business in the use of trade practices, trade names, processes of manufacture, and things of that kind. It is the amendment to which the Senator from Virginia referred a little while ago which he said had been deleted from his amendment because it had been included in another amendment.

Except where the President finds that it is positively necessary to adjust the practices of a business, the amendment would permit business to continue the practices under which it had been operating.

The amendment was designed also to do away with practices developed during the war, of changing price schedules, and going into the manufacture of one type of goods and excluding another type of goods so that the profits would be higher, and the producers would avoid the rules and regulations of the War Production Board or of the OPA.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator will bear with me, I presume he has some idea of the rules and regulations covered in the 1946 act about which we have been talking.

Mr. BRICKER. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. This would prohibit a manufacturer, we will say, of $2 shirts, stopping the manufacture of $2 shirts and going into the sport-shirt business.

Mr. BRICKER. Yes, and using the same material.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is more or less of the same provision as (k) on page 17, which says:

No regulation, order, or price schedule issued under this act shall alter the effective date of this subsection—

And so forth and so on. Am I correct?

Mr. BRICKER. It is supplemental.

Mr. MAYBANK. I feel certain that the Senator from Ohio will agree that the word "title" should be inserted instead of the word "act." The Senator intends to refer only to this title.

Mr. BRICKER. Yes. Mr. President, I modify my amendment accordingly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has so modified his amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendment. It simply writes into the bill regulations that were in the OPA regulations in World War II. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BRICKER. I now call up my amendment lettered "L."

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understand, that is only a corrective amendment.

Mr. BRICKER. A technical amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thought we accepted that amendment yesterday.

Mr. BRICKER. That was accepted yesterday, yes. I thank the chairman for calling my attention to that.

Mr. MAYBANK. I felt sure it had been. If not, the amendment can be put to a vote now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the amendment was agreed to yesterday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator offer the amendment now?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 66, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, he shall do so in such manner as to assure each individual business in the normal channel of distribution of such material of its fair share of the available civilian supply based, insofar as practicable, on the share received by such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may make a unanimous consent request with respect to another amendment?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Indiana, and the Senator from New York.

Mr. WHERRY. Just what is the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MAYBANK. The unanimous-consent request is that the Senate consider an amendment which the Committee on Banking and Currency last evening, by a vote of 9 to 0, agreed be made a part of the bill; that three lines be corrected in keeping with the wishes expressed by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Virginia was absent, but I understand it is agreeable to him.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator means to ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, line 9, after the word "order", it is proposed to insert "relating to prive controls."

On page 48, line 11, after the word "order", it is proposed to insert "relating to price controls."

On page 54, line 10, after the word "order", it is proposed to insert "relating to price controls."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and I yesterday had a conference with Mr. Ching, the Federal Mediator, and it was agreed that these words would make the section similar to the powers of the War Labor Board in World War II insofar as voluntary adjustments are concerned. These adjustments, as I understand, are brought about by an agreement between management and labor, and therefore, there cannot be any appeal to the courts after they have reached this mutual agreement. Such appeal may delay or hamper work in connection with the war effort.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. IVES. It is intended to correct an oversight by the committee when the bill was drafted. The correction is rather technical.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. IVES. I understand that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, my amendment has already been read. I should like to say that the amendment is not taken from the old law. It is a brand new suggested piece of legislation. It is occasioned by questions I have asked different Senators, members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, on the floor, as to whether or not there was any evidence adduced in the hearings by which the matter dealt with in the amendment was brought to their attention, and there is no such evidence in the hearings. All Senators to whom I home spoken, while they have not seen the amendment, having only heard it read, I believe feel that the objectives I am attempting to accomplish are worthy and should be made a part of the bill. Whether or not the language I have suggested accomplishes the designed purpose is another matter. The amendment is proposed to assure small independent businesses who depend on the major integrated producers for a large portion of their supplies, a fair and equitable share of the supplies available to the civilian market under any rationing or allocation program.

I desire to make it perfectly clear that the amendment deals only with civilian production. It comes into play only when all the priorities which are set up in the interest of national defense have taken whatever amount of production is necessary for the national defense. The wording of the amendment is "in the normal channel of distribution of such material of its fair share of the available civilian supply." So it can refer only to that part which is left, which is to be distributed for civilian use. Any priorities that are provided for, are taken out of complete production. I am talking only about what is left for the civilian production; that is all.

Title VII of the pending bill pays a great deal of lip service to small business enterprise. That is a good thing. Throughout the entire bill, beginning with the declaration of policy in section 2, the bill calls for the placing of controls within the framework of the American system of competitive enterprise, and I endorse that 100 percent. The proposed amendment puts teeth behind the lip service of the bill as written. I am confident that the Banking and Currency Committee and the Members of the Senate actually intend to aid independent business. At least I am giving them full credit for intending to do so. This is our opportunity to show the independent businessman that we want to help him and to protect him.

America became great as the result of independence of action of the small-business man. In a free economy the independent man purchased supplies from the integrated businessman and still sells in competition with his larger competitor, and on many fronts very favorably so.

In a controlled economy, however, this one weapon no longer is available to the independent, because the very essence of controls means elimination of freedom of action.

If at the same time we also destroy or take away the supply of the independent businessman we are sounding his death knell. In most industries the large integrated business is a major factor in the control of the available supply.

In normal times integrated business sells products to the independent and also competes with the independent businessman at each level of distribution. In a period of short supply of available civilian material, such as that we now apparently are entering—and the existence of such a period is the justification for this bill—the large enterprise can absorb all the available civilian supply and can eliminate its former customers and competitors—the independents. We must make sure that the normal practice by which the larger sells to the smaller is maintained if free enterprise is to survive this control period. That is the objective of the Banking and Currency Committee, and it is set forth in the declaration of policy to be found at the beginning of title VII of this measure.

Thus if enterprise A purchased X amount of material from enterprise B during a representative pre-Korean-situation period, when allocation or rationing is instituted, enterprise A is entitled to its proportionate share of the available civilian supply produced and sold by enterprise B during the control period. The amendment is as simple as that; that is all this formula does.

Mr. President, if there must be consultations between the distinguished chairman of the committee and various other members of the committee, I do not object to having them confer, but I wish they would do so off the floor, for I have not yet finished my statement.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I prefer not to yield until I finish my statement.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me say that I have not been conferring with anyone. The conference was going on between my distinguished friend the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I was not conferring; I was simply reading the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not complaining, but it is difficult to buck the competition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes that all Senators, as well as others who are not Senators, will recognize the difficulty of transacting business here if there are constant conversations. It is difficult for a whisper not to be heard in this Chamber.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I have just given an illustration of how the formula would work. All Members of the Senate who have had anything to do with the Special Committee on Small Business, and other Members of the Senate who have had something to do with petroleum, know that the greatest source of supply of petroleum products is the large integrated companies, and that over the years many small independents purchase their supplies from such integrated companies, after which the independents resell the product, either under their own label or as independents, to the people of the communities. That occurs, for instance, in the case of fuel oil, gasoline, other petroleum products, distillates, and what not.

Every member of the committee knows that during the last war, many of the integrated companies continued to control and sell their output, clear down to the retail level. When independents were dependent upon them for their source of supply, the integrated companies did not continue to make the supply available to the independents. Then the independents had to try to find another source of supply, and then another source of supply; but in each case, the independent was told, "We have to take care of our own allocations, so we cannot supply you at this time." That is exactly what happened.

I sat in the committee meeting at Chicago, one afternoon, as chairman of the Special Committee on Small Business, and in the course of that afternoon and during the next 2 days I heard more than 200 independent dealers in gasoline testify that their source of supply had been taken away from them. It was only after that matter was forcibly called to the attention of the Special Committee that we were able to get a voluntary agreement on the part of the integrated companies that from then on they would give to the small dealers the same quotas they had had during the 2 years prior to the time of the allocation. That was done under a voluntary plan. At that time under a voluntary plan there was being done what we would like to see done now, in the case of the entire distribution of civilian goods through the normal channels of trade.

If that is not done, there will be dislocation; and then the very ones we want to help by this measure will be forced to go to new sources of supply, and there is where the black market begins.

Of course, what is true in the case of fuel oil is also true in the case of steel, newspaper print, and meat. The Special Committee on Small Business had a wide experience with all of them.

So all we are attempting to do by means of this amendment is to give the President full power to determine the base period which he wishes to use in connection with the determination of the percentage of the supply of a commodity which a purchaser is entitled to receive under the civilian economy.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Has he submitted the amendment today?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Nebraska consulted the legislative counsel in regard to the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, I did; after the amendment was prepared. I prepared the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that.

Mr. WHERRY. I prepared the amendment; and then I submitted it to the legislative counsel, and a man from the office of the legislative counsel stayed with us until we finally had the amendment in shape ready to be offered in the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I meant.

When the Senator from Nebraska concludes his speech, I should like to suggest that I have conferred with the legislative counsel regarding the amendment, because the legislative counsel told me they had seen the amendment the Senator from Nebraska had completed. Of course, I realize the Senator from Nebraska drew the amendment, and then the legislative counsel saw it.

However, I have not seen the amendment. So I wonder whether the Senator from Nebraska will withhold the amendment until I can read it and study it, inasmuch as it has not been printed. I am not opposing the distinguished Senator from Nebraska in this connection, but I should like to be able to read the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere in any way with the consideration of all amendments and the speedy passage of this bill.

Last Thursday this matter first developed, in the course of colloquy, when I asked some questions about the distribution of the civilian supply.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I think the question arose in the course of a colloquy between myself and the distinguished Senator from New York.

It was then that I went to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee and asked if there had been any evidence to show a need for the distribution of products through the normal channels of trade. He said there had not been. Then I suggested that I would offer the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Nebraska is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Several suggestions were made—by the distinguished Senator from New York, I believe—to the effect that if I had any amendments to offer, I should get them ready to offer, and then should submit them to the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I did not mean to differ with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me to finish the explanation, I do not think there will be any difficulty regarding the amendment.

It is a minor amendment, of course. I do not believe it is of such major importance that we should delay much longer in adopting it. But if it is felt that the amendment should go over until tomorrow, then, when I complete my explanation of the amendment, I shall be glad to let the amendment go over until tomorrow, if Senators wish to have that done.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me ask a question. During the explanation, does the Senator intend to bring to the attention of the Senate what provision would be made for new businesses or for any one wishing to go into a new business in a field or industry where a snortage exists?

Mr. WHERRY. No; that is outside of this amendment; but the suggestion the Senator from Ohio has made is a most important one.

Under the voluntary plan we worked out, there was a certain reserve which the integrated companies took out of their own supply, in order to be able to take care of whatever new businesses they felt should be served. I say to the distinguished Senator from Ohio that it was very difficult then, and it will be very difficult in the future, to provide allocations for new businesses, because not only is there the problem of allocations, but also the problem in connection with the establishment of the new businesses themselves.

Men who came back from the war wanted to go into business. After they got the facilities, then they could not get the supplies. That was true with respect to gasoline, it was true in the case of the newspaper business, it was true in the meat business, it was true in the automobile business.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. In a moment, when I finish the answer to the Senator from Ohio. That is another problem which has to be confronted by the economy, and especially when there are integrated sources of supply. Now, if anyone wants to propose an amendment to modify my amendment so as to include new sources, there is no objection on the part of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in that connection?

Mr. WHERRY. In a moment, please. I was simply offering an amendment which I thought to be absolutely necessary, an amendment to subsection (2), page 77, in relation to allocations of the civilian supply under this section.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I have told the Senator from Alabama I would yield to him. If he does not object, I shall yield to the Senator from Louisiana and then to the Senator from Alabama. But I said I would yield to the Senator from Alabama next, and I certainly shall.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the questions I desire to ask the distinguished Senator are along the line of the one propounded by the distinguished Senator from Ohio. If this amendment is adopted, would it not have the tendency of freezing in the hands of a company its old customers, so that it would not be able to sell to anyone else?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that is exactly what I want to do, depending upon the base period. It is immaterial to me whether the President makes the decision, though I leave it to him in the amendment. If the President can decide upon the base period, he should have the power, and he should do it. I only want to go back as far as practical. If it is 30 days, all right; if it is 6 months, it is all right; if it is 1 year, it is all right. But if there is to be any allocation to new business, I think it ought to come out of the share of the great integrated businesses, not out of the share of the independents. If those who administer the proposed act do what they did under the previous act, that will be the result. The Senator from Ohio has raised another part of this question; and if any Senator wants to suggest a modifying amendment to make some provision for new business, it is all right with me. But I was simply proposing to amend subsection (2), which has to do with business already established. I am now glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. How could that be done, unless the producer were given more to distribute?

Mr. WHERRY. If the producer gets more to distribute, he can take care of new business, and if he does not get more to distribute, he should take care of the customers he already serves, and, if he can be assured of his source of supply, out of his own allocation he should take care of new business. Does that answer the question?

Mr. ELLENDER. The distinguished Senator referred to numerous hearings which were held with respect to small business. I was a member of the Small Business Committee. But is it not a fact that all the complaints came from those who had new business?

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no.

Mr. ELLENDER. And from those who expanded themselves tremendously during the war?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator has not read my amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes, I have.

Mr. WHERRY. If he has, he should have noted that it does not provide for increasing business to old customers.

Mr. ELLENDER. No. It does not provide for increasing the business of old customers.

Mr. WHERRY. I will read the amendment:

> When the President invokes the powers given him in this act to allocate or approve agreements allocating any material, he shall do so in such manner as to assure each individual business, in the normal channel of distribution of such material, of its fair share of the available civilian supply, based insofar as practicable on the share received by such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950.

The amendment would not give an old customer one drop more fuel oil than he previously had. He could not get a drop more unless, if you please, the distributor had an abundant supply, so that if he wanted to give him more he could. But this amendment would guarantee that at least the old customer, on a percentage basis, would get what he was entitled to according to the base period. If 20 percent were lopped off, he would have to take 20 percent less; and that would be his fair share.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. IVES. I am sure this is an amendment which was drafted as a result of the conversation which the distinguished Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from New York had on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. IVES. I wish to commend the Senator from Nebraska for having prepared this amendment and having offered it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield. I am sorry not to have been able to yield to the Senator sooner.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is all right, because I think a full discussion of all these matters is quite helpful, and I believe the objective sought by the Senator from Nebraska is a good one. Some of us have been troubled about the position of businesses which might not be able to establish a base period under the Senator's amendment. We have jotted down certain language which I should like to read and have the Senator follow, to see whether it does not make the very modification he is suggesting, and whether perhaps it might be acceptable to the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment proposes to insert at the same place this language:

> It is the intent of Congress that in allocating materials and in approving agreements allocating materials the President shall, to the maximum extent practicable, make use of the normal channels of business, particularly independent small-business enterprises, and prevent diversions of materials from such normal channels and independent small-business enterprises.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that language would not be acceptable to the junior Senator from Nebraska. I say that, much as I would like to take it. I believe if I could sit down with the distinguished chairman of the Small Business Committee I could point out why. It would entail much argument. Briefly, it would give discretionary power to the President, insofar as practicable, to do what I am trying to do. I want to make it mandatory that in the allocation of materials they be distributed in the normal channels of trade, in order to eliminate black markets. That is my purpose.

I may say that the expression "as far as practicable" in the last line refers only to the base period, and with that I would go along, because I do not want to provide any base period which is not practicable. Does the Senator see what I mean? I would give unlimited discretion to the President to make that determination. But I simply want to make it mandatory that the normal channels of trade shall be followed in the distribution of the civilian supply of any scarce commodity. I may say to the distinguished Senator that unless that is done, independents will be cut off, time after time, and will be forced to seek new sources of supply. When that is done, they bid up the gray market, and when they bid up the gray market in steel and in gasoline a price is obtained that results in a black-market price to the distributor and, finally, to the retailer. It simply cannot be done.

I say to the distinguished Senator that if there is any reason this afternoon why the committee does not want to vote on this amendment or wants to give it further consideration, though I should like to finsh my remarks on it, I should be glad to have it considered by the committee until tomorrow or until such time as the committee would like to bring it up. But I should like to say as forcefully as I can that the whole economy of the small independent businessman is at the mercy of those who distribute, if you please, these goods finally down to the retailer.

In the case of voluntary agreements we did the best we could in attempting to get distribution through the normal channels of trade. I am satisfied that the formula we used should be written into the legislation in order to accomplish that purpose and to eradicate as far as possible the black market which always occurs when there is a dislocation at the source of supply.

Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. SPARKMAN, and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. First, I yield further to the Senator from Alabama, with whom I have been discussing this question, and I will then yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I fully understand the point made by the Senator from Nebraska, that he wants this made mandatory.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wonder, then, if the rest of the language I suggested would be acceptable if we drop out the first few words, "It is the intent of Congress," and say, "In making allocations the President shall," and then go on with the rest of the language.

Mr. WHERRY. I have not had an opportunity to look over the language, but if the Senator wants to let it go over until tomorrow, I shall have plenty of time to look it over.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to thank the Senator from Nebraska. I am in thorough accord with his ideas.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall withdraw the amendment at this time and bring it up again later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws his amendment without prejudice.

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly want to withdraw it without prejudice. I thank the Presiding Officer for those words.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wonder if it would be agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska, in order that we may have the amendments in printed form before us, if I offer my amendment at this time and let it be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WHERRY. My understanding was that I would confer with the distinguished Senator from Alabama and try to prepare language which would be acceptable to both the Senator from Alabama and the junior Senator from Nebraska, and then the amendment can be offered, if we can agree on the same language. If we cannot agree, then the Senator can offer his amendment and I can offer mine.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course, that is perfectly agreeable. I should be very glad to wait and attempt to draft language acceptable to the Senator, and then have it offered as an amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand what the Senator wants. Possibly the best thing to do is to offer it. I shall offer my amendment and ask to have it printed and lie on the table. In the meantime I shall talk with the distinguished Senator from Alabama, and if we can draft language which is satisfactory we can agree and can offer one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator does not withdraw his amendment for the time being?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. He wishes to have it printed and lie on the table?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to offer the amendment which I read a few moments ago and ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, different industries will have to be administered in different ways. But the formula is there. The intent of Congress is clear. It does not matter whether it concerns fuel oil, newsprint, steel, meat, or anything else, the formula is there, so that those who have been dependent upon an integrated source of supply, will not, when materials become scarce, be shut off because they have no other place to get their supplies. We should not fold up an economy which has already been established.

The incentive for black markets will be eliminated. I say that constructively. I want to agree with the Banking and Currency Committee as to the time or anything else. If they want to offer an amendment, it is all right with me, but I think that when this formula is in actual operation the black markets will be eliminated, in that each segment of our economy will thus be assured of its fair share of the available civilian supply. They may have to take 25 percent less or 50 percent less than they formerly received, but they will not be cut off entirely and have to shut their doors.

This is a formula which was proved in a voluntary allocation period by action of the oil industry. Possibly I should not mention my name, but the formula did go under the name of the Wherry formula. It was a formula of the Small Business Committee, but because I happened to be the chairman my name was attached to the formula. The staff and all who worked with us devised this formula, and I want to give them the credit for it.

The combined Senate and House Small Business Committees, during the last control period, by concurrent resolution, requested that a similar program be instituted for the meat industry.

The American businessman will cooperate with the program rather than seek devious means of avoiding it, because he knows his source of supply will not dwindle and dry up. Then he is not going to worry about going into the black market. The rules of fair play will be evident; and Americans are known for their cooperation when they are getting an even break.

We do not know when the President will invoke the authority granted him. We do not know what Russia's time table may be, and, consequently, we do not know how long these controls will last. We must, therefore, give the President a formula by which he is to control American business. This is a responsibility of Congress which it should never delegate to the executive branch. When we adopt this amendment we shall be able to face the country in the certain knowledge that we have done all within our power to protect the American way of life by having civilian production distributed through the normal channels of trade.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Suppose company A has 100,000 tons of steel and distributes that steel among 50 customers over the period of a year, and suppose the allocation were reduced to 60 percent of the prewar quantity: Is it the Senator's intention, by his amendment, to provide that all the 50 customers shall receive 60 percent of what they receive prior to the war?

Mr. WHERRY. It would be that portion which would be left for civilian distribution.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am not speaking of civilian distribution; I am talking about the amount to be allocated.

Mr. WHERRY. I am talking only about civilian distribution. Let us start from there. If the Government agencies, for military or defense purposes, should take 40 percent of the steel and there were no other priorities established by the agency making allocations, then the available supply would be 60 percent of what it was before the allocations were made to the military. On the basis of the period which the President would select the 50 purchasers would be entitled percentagewise to their percentage.

Mr. ELLENDER. So that the 50 companies would take the whole supply?

Mr. WHERRY. The base period might be so established that only those customers who had been purchasing—possibly 25 percent of them had not purchased during the year, but we can set up the base period in any way we want to. We can make it 2 years.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would the Senator make it a particular day?

Mr. WHERRY. That is left up to the President.

Mr. ELLENDER. If only 10 customers out of 50 bought on that one day——

Mr. WHERRY. I would not make it a day, but if the President made it a 6-month period and 40 percent of the customers had been customers for more than 6 months, they would be entitled to a supply. If 10 percent of them had been taken on within 6 months, they would not be entitled to the supply.

Mr. ELLENDER. The distributing concern would not be able to sell to them?

Mr. WHERRY. It would be like a new business: They would have to seek their source of supply wherever they could find it. That is exactly what they will do anyway. The minute the Government takes up 40 percent, the supplier has to look to how he is going to distribute 60 percent when he used to distribute 100 percent. To whom will he distribute? Will it be to the man who offers more money than the normal channels of trade would pay him in the legal market?

The Senator has raised a very good point, and the answer is right there. The moment they take a new source of supply at a higher price, there is a gray market, and that results in a black market to the retail purchaser.

There is no provision made for new business. There was that difficulty during the last war, and we shall have it during this war, whether we adopt this formula or whether we do not. If there were some way in which allocations could be made for new business it would be very helpful indeed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wonder whether we could dovetail them together.

Mr. WHERRY. I am willing to listen to any suggestion any Senator may desire to offer, but it is a very difficult thing to handle.

I will say, Mr. President, that most of the integrated oil companies—and I want to pay them a high compliment—voluntarily did this during the period of the last war, and they did a magnificent job. The same thing was finally accomplished in other fields. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] had more to do with it than did any other member of the committee at that time. He did a good job in ironing out a formula.

The same thing was true to a great extent with respect to steel. It was a little more difficult in the case of steel because steel was very scarce. The percentage that was taken for defense was enormous. However, in a large measure it was accomplished in the case of steel.

The same argument was presented relative to meat on the amendment which we discussed yesterday. If we keep the normal supply and the normal production in normal channels of trade, we eliminate the black market. It is when we have a dislocation in the normal supply that black markets spring up all over the country. I hope my amendment or a similar amendment will be placed in the bill, whether it be voluntary or mandatory, so that the normal channels of trade can be assured of supplies and the integrated companies will not take away the normal channels of trade from the small independent companies.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BRICKER. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I am also concerned with the stagnation which may come to American business. There is nothing in the formula which would take care of one business which is more essential than another business or which is a growing business. I am thinking of the vast varieties of uses in the fabrication of steel. The needs of society generally may not be satisfied, and the whole program of industry might be curbed or stagnated if no consideration were given to that phase of the allocation problem.

Mr. WHERRY. It has been taken care of in this amendment because the President would be given the authority under the bill to allocate anything in the interest of national defense. He would have authority to allocate anything that is necessary in the interest of national defense down to housing or anything else. That would be taken care of. Therefore, it would not come into the distribution at all. This applies only after all priorities have been set up.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. It applies to civilian goods, does it not?

Mr. WHERRY. There would be no priorities on what is left. It would apply to anything in the interest of the war effort or for the defense of the country. It would apply to housing, probably, so far as steel for windows in housing was concerned. That would come under the power given to the President in the interest of national defense. This would apply only to what is left for the civilian economy. If the amendment can be worded any differently——

Mr. BRICKER. Under this formula it would be limited, and after the war would go back into normal production channels?

Mr. WHERRY. If the supply is taken over for war purposes, there would be no allocations for civilian purposes.

Mr. BRICKER. But when the war program is over, do conditions return to those prevailing at the base period?

Mr. WHERRY. The controls would last as long as the President kept them in effect. The minute the controls were taken off the supplier could do as he pleased. So long as allocations remained this amendment would be in full force and effect. The moment controls were taken off it would no longer be in effect.

Mr. BRICKER. I am thinking of the manufacturer of automobiles, for example. If a manufacturer of automobiles should switch to the manufacture of tanks, shells, and other armaments, how would that situation be taken care of at the end of the period?

Mr. WHERRY. I have given most of my attention to the purchases of supplies from an integrated company, but my answer to the Senator's question would be that any company which turned over its facilities to make tanks and materials of war would be compensated by the Government if the contracts were terminated. In other words, they would have to find their own purchasers, just as anyone else would have to do.

Mr. BRICKER. Would the amendment follow down through the various strata of frabrication to the ultimate consumer?

Mr. WHERRY. Absolutely.

I call the Senator's attention to the hearing we had with reference to a blast furnace which was being built either under lease or contract for the Republic Steel Co. in the Senator's own State. He remembers well the hearing we had in reference to that plant. The plant was about to be sold to an automobile manufacturer. It would have taken away the source of supply of at least 200 small foundries in Ohio. The amendment means that integrated companies that have their supply must come right down through the normal channels of trade. I have in mind a packing plant.

A great corporation with many stores in this section of the country, one of the four largest retailers of foods in the United States, went into my State and bought a big packing plant. The corporation bought it for the purpose of increasing their meat supply during the present scarce period, so they could supply their customers in the seaboard States. One cannot blame them for trying to do that. However, this rule applied, and they had first to supply the dealers who were dependent on the big plant through 2 years before they could take any of that product for their use in the seaboard States. I think everyone will agree that is good business, and that it is normal business. They had to take care of the small retailers and the small independent merchants on the percentage basis which had obtained prior to the purchase of the plant before they could take the meat supply and distribute it through their stores.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, would this amendment apply to all retailers in the Nation?

Mr. WHERRY. The retailers would finally get the benefit of it, although the source of steel, newsprint, fuel oil, and so forth, must make the intermediate steps. That is where our first difficulty comes. However, the retailer would finally get his normal supply under the terms of this amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Assuming the manufacture and production of everything in the United States were reduced. We have about 10,000,000 items of production in the United States. Would the amendment require that the President take the 3,800,000 business units in the United States and issue coupon books to them?

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no. The allocation of steel and the allocation of all such other materials would be done mostly at the source of supply. It would follow normal channels of trade without any difficulty. If a retailer obtained his source of supply from a wholesaler of fuel oil, let us say, in South Bend, Ind., and the wholesaler refused to sell that retailer, he could come before our committee and show cause to the committee, and the committee could make a finding that the retailer, being an old customer, was entitled percentagewise to the same quantity that he received before, instead of having an integrated company process the fuel oil and sell it through a retailer across the street.

Mr. CAPEHART. Would this compel a distributor likewise to allocate his distribution to other retailers?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly; all the way through.

Mr. CAPEHART. Would it compel the retailer to allocate to the farmers?

Mr. WHERRY. If he were a truck man or an automobile man—and the Senator is a manufacturer—a wholesaler and a retailer would be entitled percentagewise to the amounts they had obtained during the base period the President would set up. If they should not get it, what would happen? They would take their money and go into the market and pay a bootleg price for it. That is exactly what happens. They would pay either a bootleg or a black-market price. That is what causes the black market. The same applies to meats. If meat is not handled through the normal channels of trade, there will be small packing plants springing up all over the United States. There were 26,000 during the war. They do not use the offal, and the insulin is lost, and the meat is handled on the black market.

If I ever made an appeal in my life for a piece of legislation that I thought was needed, I am making it for the amendment now pending. I may not have the amendment written as the Committee on Banking and Currency would like to have it, and I am perfectly willing to sit down with the committee and attempt to adjust the language to make it satisfactory, but I do not want to adjust the language so that it will defeat the purpose of the formula. If the formula which was successful in voluntary allocations is adopted, I am satisfied it will help make the act successful, if there are mandatory controls, and allocations placed upon the American economy.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska postponed the consideration of his amendment until tomorrow, and that is appreciated. Another Senator is going to have an amendment, and I have an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have printed and held over until tomorrow. The Department of Agriculture and the Commodity Credit Corporation advise me that there are conflicts between the dates of May 24 and June 24. I shall not ask to have the amendment considered this afternoon, but I present it and ask to have it printed and we can consider other amendments this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, immediately following the quorum call this afternoon, I discussed with the minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska, the question of a unanimous-consent agreement under which the Senate might vote upon the bill and all amendments thereto. No definite agreement was reached. Several different days were suggested, and I am wondering if we might not explore the situation at the present time to see whether or not we could reach some sort of unanimous-consent agreement to fix a date when we might be able to vote on the amendments and the bill. Insofar as I am concerned, any day is satisfactory with me—tomorrow, the next day, or the next day, certainly sometime soon.

In talking a moment ago with the able junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, he advised me that the phase of the appropriation bill dealing with Federal Security and Labor had been unanimously agreed upon in conference, and there was some indication by the Senator from California, as well as other Senators, at noon, when we were discussing matters before the Democratic policy committee, that the Committee on Appropriations might be able to finish the conference perhaps this week, certainly not later than sometime next week.

As soon as we can act on the conference report on the appropriations bill, and the conference report on the social-security bill, and finish with the pending bill and the conference report on that, and the tax bill, and, as I told the able Senator from Nebraska at noon, the security measures which are now on the Senate calendar, it would be my intention to see if we could not then perhaps make an arrangement for recesses for periods of 3 days at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Will the Senator permit an inquiry from the Chair as to the highway bill?

Mr. LUCAS. I was about to come to that. In the discussion of the various bills by the Democratic Policy Committee it was brought out that perhaps the mineral interest conveyance bill, H. R. 4800, should be considered. I believe the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] objected to that, and I presume he persists in his objections, and we may be compelled to move to bring the bill before the Senate for consideration.

Then there is H. R. 7941, a bill to extend the Federal aid highways program, and also the possibility of considering H. R. 2734, which amends section 711 of the Clayton Act. There may be a few other bills of a minor nature which are not too important, which we could probably finish before we conclude.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I told the Senator from Nebraska that we would also consider definitely at the proper time, following the disposition of the pending bill and the tax bill, all the different phases of the internal security bills which are on the calendar at the present time.

I have noticed that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] have offered an amendment to the pending bill to be known as title VIII, under the caption "Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950." I hope the Senators will not insist upon that amendment to this defense production bill, because, as I told the Senator from Nebraska today, at the proper time we are going to consider all the internal security measures. It seems to me we should consider the Mundt-Ferguson proposal upon its merits, and its merits alone, and not attach it to the important measure we are now considering.

I will say now definitely that if we are asked to proceed with that amendment it will be the intention of the majority leader to oppose with all the strength he has including it in the pending bill. I do not think it belongs on this bill, in view of the fact that we are going to debate all the phases of internal security before the Congress adjourns.

It should be sufficient for any Senator to know that the Mundt-Ferguson bill, any bill which the administration has to offer, the McCarran bill, the internal security bills which are on the calendar, and any other security measure, will probably be discussed at one time and disposed of at one time.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the distinguished majority leader about the court picketing bill.

Mr. LUCAS. The policy committee has not considered the picketing bill. The Senator can throw that in when we start talking about security measures. I presume he can bring that up also.

Mr. ELLENDER. If we cannot consider it independently, I propose to follow that course.

Mr. LUCAS. I am in favor of getting all the internal security possible.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The able majority leader may have mentioned this, but I did not hear it. Was anything said about the renegotiation bill? Is it contemplated that Congress will complete action at this session on the renegotiation bill?

Mr. LUCAS. So far as the policy committee is concerned, or so far as the administration is concerned, there has been no discussion of it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have received several inquiries, as I presume other Senators have, from a good many small businesses, which are particularly interested in ascertaining whether or not there will be an accelerated depreciation provision. I understood that might be a part of the renegotiation bill.

Mr. LUCAS. It could be. I have not discussed it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I talked with the majority leader at the beginning of the session, and I am sure he remembers the colloquy we had, in which I said that the minority was ready and willing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement at any time when we could arrange for a vote on a day certain. I gave the distinguished majority leader my viewpoint at that time, and told him I would wait until he would make a proposition to us. Since that happened several amendments have been offered. If the majority leader wishes to suggest a day for the votes to be taken I shall be glad to let him know whether the date he suggests is agreeable. I should be glad to talk to him off the floor and try to arrange for a day. I did not know that so many amendments were to be offered to the bill. I still think the date I suggested is satisfactory. I shall be glad to talk with the majority leader off the floor on the subject.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that insofar as the majority leader is concerned I am ready to vote tomorrow, or the next day, or the next day. Certain Senators desire to do certain things with respect to engagements they have made some time in the past. They made them probably with the thought, or at least with the hope, that we might be able to get away from Washington on August 1 or August 5. Many Senators have important engagements they obviously would like to fill. It certainly is my intention to accommodate any Senators I possibly can accommodate, but at the same time I should like to move along with the pending bill, because of its importance. It is a war measure. We should move along with it as rapidly and expeditiously as possible. I know the Senator from Nebraska desires to do that. So I say that if we could vote tomorrow on the bill and all amendments thereto I should like to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect. If that is not possible, I should like to make it the next day, or any day the Senator from Nebraska feels will be acceptable to the Members on his side of the aisle. I have discussed the proposition with various Senators on this side of the aisle, and I doubt if there is any Senator who would not be willing to vote tomorrow night on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I did not know that Wednesday was being considered. I believe a unanimous-consent agreement can be arranged for action probably on Thursday or Friday or Monday of next week. I cannot say for sure. However, when I discussed the time for voting I was attempting to suggest a day that was agreeable to both sides. I at least gained the impression that possibly Monday of next week was most agreeable to Senators. But if the Senator from Illinois wants to make a proposition for Thursday or Friday, I shall discuss it with the minority Members and will let him know what is agreeable to them.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that either Thursday or Friday of this week is satisfactory to me. We have our Democratic rally, the Governor's Day, in Illinois on Thursday. I had planned to be there. But it will be perfectly all right with me if I miss being there and remain here to vote on the bill on Thursday.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will yield, I will say I am quite satisfied there is going to be considerable debate on the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I thought the Senator was going to say there would be considerable debate over the speech I intend to make.

Mr. WHERRY. There will probably be a considerable amount of debate about it in Illinois. I should like to skip as much of that as we can at this time.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator means my speech.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. The Senator's speech in Illinois can be discussed by the people there.

Mr. LUCAS. I did not think the Senator was coming out there to hear it.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not mean that I was going out there, no. My thought was that there will be considerable discussion of his speech in Illinois, when it is delivered.

Mr. President, I am serious about the proposal for a unanimous-consent agreement. I suggested what I thought was a date most agreeable to all parties concerned. I shall not attempt to work the other side of the aisle. I have enough trouble working my own side. But I am satisfied that Monday of next week would be agreeable now, provided we could vote on all the amendments which have been offered and the amendments which may be offered, and I would even be willing to limit the time for debate to 10 minutes on each amendment, allowing 5 minutes' discussion on each side on each amendment. If that is agreeable we can reach such an agreement now. I shall be glad to canvass the membership on this side of the aisle, and let the Senator from Illinois know whether we can agree to a date earlier than that.

I make that statement because I know Thursday is an important day in Illinois, and I know it is important in other sections of the United States. If it will be of any help, I shall be glad to canvass this side of the aisle to see if we can reach an agreement. I should like the Senator to know that I am just as anxious as he is to get a vote on the bill tomorrow, or the next day, or the next day.

Mr. LUCAS. I want it understood that it is perfectly all right with me, regardless of what day is agreed upon.

Mr. WHERRY. I might be able to work out an agreement for the vote to be had on Thursday, if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to hold up action on the bill for 1 minute. I simply want to have an agreement as to the most advantageous time to act.

Mr. President, if the majority leader will permit me to say so, I believe it would be well for him and the minority leader to work out a unanimous-consent agreement, and bring it to the floor of the Senate for action. It ought to be written out so there will be no misunderstanding about it. I shall be glad to do that tomorrow, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. If an agreement is worked out, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, for a vote on the amendments and on the bill itself, with a total of 10 minutes being allowed for discussion of each amendment, that is 5 minutes to each side, then, if the vote is fixed for Monday, the amendments should be printed and should lie on the desk on Friday, as under the rule of the Senate the amendments will have to lie on the desk for 1 day. I do not want amendments to be brought in at the last moment. We should have time to study them.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I now extend an invitation to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency or to the majority leader, to work out a unanimous-consent agreement, and I want to say that it might be worked out, so far as we are concerned, for tomorrow, if necessary. I shall be glad to spend the intervening time endeavoring to discover whether an agreement can be made for tomorrow.

Mr. MAYBANK. Did the Senator say for tomorrow?

Mr. WHERRY. It might be late tomorrow.

Mr. CAPEHART. We are ready to vote tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to work out an agreement with the majority leader. I want to have it written out. The last time we entered into a unanimous-consent agreement, it was entered into on the floor, and from time to time during the discussion something was added to the proposed agreement, or taken from it, so when we finally got through we did not know just what the agreement contained. I should like to have a written agreement presented to the Senate for its action upon it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. If an agreement is proposed to be entered into to vote tomorrow, I shall object.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator please repeat his statement?

Mr. LANGER. If it is proposed that a vote be taken tomorrow, I shall enter an objection.

Mr. CAPEHART. How about Thursday?

Mr. LANGER. That is all right.

Mr. WHERRY. We can eliminate much discussion and misunderstanding if the majority and minority leaders endeavor to work out the agreement.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to see the plan the majority and minority leaders work out, for I may have certain objections to raise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The Chair wishes to announce that no amendment is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 708, commencing on line 7, of page 73, through line 3, on page 74, and to insert:

SEC. 708. (a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this act.

(b) No act or omission to act requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the provisions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States.

(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall only be delegated upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

Strike all of section 712, commencing on line 20 of page 76 through line 2 on page 79.

Renumber sections 713, 714, 715, and 716 as necessary.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, the amendment is somewhat technical, and I had hesitated to bring up this afternoon any technical or controversial amendments to the bill. However, the main provisions of the amendment are substantially agreed upon.

The amendment eliminates the entire section in regard to removal of voluntary agreements for the allocation of materials from application of the prohibitions of the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission laws, and has the effect of placing such agreements under the mandatory-agreement provisions. I think the amendment clarifies the program. This matter was originally considered in that way, and the other provision was put in as a precaution.

In discussing the matter with the staff of the committee, the staff of my office, and a representative of the Department of Commerce, I have concluded that my amendment provides a better way of handling the matter.

One provision of the amendment is somewhat controversial. In the beginning, the committee included a provision to the effect that before the President makes the allocation orders, under either voluntary agreements or mandatory allocations, he shall consult with the Attorney General; and then provision was added that the President also should consult with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. Of course, both of those officials have some somewhat conflicting and overlapping authority in the field of enforcement of the antitrust laws, as we well know.

The amendment does not require that they approve such agreements or that the President follow their suggestions or that they shall have a veto power over the President's action in this connection or over the arrangements entered into by the industry generally in respect to an allocation program; but the amendment eliminates the requirement for consultation with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

The provision requiring consultation with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission was written in the bill by the committee. I opposed such a provision there, and I can see no reason why the President should be required to confer with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission before the President signs one of these orders or before an industry is relieved from the obligations under the antitrust laws and the Federal trade laws. I think such a requirement would be needlessly encumbering and would be likely to cause constant conflict between the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. In my opinion, the Attorney General is the chief officer who is charged with enforcement of the antitrust laws, and I do not think we should encumber the President or industry with a requirement that the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission also be consulted in such cases.

As I have said, I think the other provisions of the amendment are generally acceptable to the committee and to the Department. The provision of the amendment to which I have just referred is its only controversial feature. In regard to it, I stand on one side, and others stand on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I am in accord with the Senator from Ohio insofar as he seeks to combine these two provisions of the bill. The only point at issue, as the Senator from Ohio has stated, is the question of leaving out the provision with respect to consultation with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

If the Senator from Ohio would agree to reinsert the name of the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission in the two places in the bill where it would be omitted under the provisions of his amendment, then I would raise no question about the amendment and I would hope that no other Senator on this side would do so, because I think the amendment then would be a good solution in respect to combining the two sections which some of us have felt might be construed as contradictory or to some extent conflicting with each other.

Mr. BRICKER. I do not wish to consent to such a modification of my amendment, and I will vote "no" if the Senator from Alabama offers such an amendment to mine.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I shall offer such an amendment to the Senator's amendment.

As a matter of fact, I should prefer that we have the language of the House bill in this particular section. The House bill provides exactly what I tried to have included in our bill in the committee, in that the House bill provides that the consultation shall be with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and that any notice served on the Attorney General as to the withdrawal or the setting up of an agreement shall likewise be served upon the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

As the Senator from Ohio will recall, I offered an amendment to the effect that if the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission differ in their interpretations in regard to any ruling which they believe should be made, the President then shall decide as between them, and also that in normal cases these shall be publication of the findings in the Federal Register.

In the committee, the Senator from Ohio argued against that suggestion, doing so with such force and, I feared, so effectively, that I withdrew the amendment before it was voted on in the committee, and I said I would be content to rest with the insertion of the words "Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission," in the proper places in this measure.

I understand the objection of the distinguished Senator from Ohio to this provision, of course. I wish to state my position, because I am just as convinced that my viewpoint is right as he is convinced that his viewpoint is right.

Congress has seen fit to give to the Department of Justice certain parts of the jurisdiction in respect to antitrust matters, and Congress has seen fit to give to the Federal Trade Commission other parts of that jurisdiction.

To state the matter briefly, let me say that the Department of Justice looks after the criminal features regarding prosecutions or suits for violation of the various antitrust laws, and the Federal Trade Commission looks after such matters on the civil side. The farthest the Federal Trade Commission can go in its orders is, I believe, to order that those engaging in certain practices cease and desist them.

Mr. BRICKER. The Federal Trade Commission also can go into court in order to have such orders enforced.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; to have its orders to cease and desist enforced.

However, the Federal Trade Commission has no power in regard to criminal prosecutions in that connection.

Mr. President, a great deal of dissatisfaction was expressed in regard to the idea of putting in this bill or any other bill a provision to exempt such agreements from the operations of the antitrust laws. We had before our committee some testimony in opposition to that proposal. I am sure every Senator has received many letters on the subject. I have received some very strong protests from various small-business organizations and from many small businesses over the country which are afraid of agreements which in ordinary times might have the effect of squeezing them out or of damaging them in their efforts to keep up with the sharp competition in business. They are, therefore, afraid of anything being done which would take away from them that mantle of protection. I believe that the way we have written it and the way it is proposed to be written through the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, provided he will include those two little safeguards, no small-business concern in this country ought to be afraid. I am a strong believer in the voluntary agreements. As a matter of fact, in the Eightieth Congress, when the plan was before us to provide for voluntary allocations and to exempt such agreements from the antitrust provisions, I supported that measure. I received some criticism for having supported it, but I still believe that it was right, and I believe it is right to include it in this bill. I want to see as much worked out as we possibly can in the way of voluntary agreements and to carry them into effect, yet I know that many businesses in this country, particularly small businesses, are afraid of this thing being put into effect. Merely by inserting these two little safeguards they will be given a much better feeling of assurance. I do not believe it would create any friction.

As a matter of fact, I have in my files a letter from the Attorney General of the United States written to Representative CELLER, of the House of Representatives, who had made inquiry regarding this matter when this bill was under discussion in the House of Representatives. In his letter the Attorney General joined in the request that the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission be included at these two places in the bill, in accordance with the manner in which the Senate committee included it. Certainly, if the Attorney General were at all afraid that there would be friction, he would not agree to this suggestion. I should like to read a few excerpts from his letter, which was dated August 2, 1950, and was addressed to the Honorable EMANUEL CELLER, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, of the House of Representatives:

At a conference yesterday with representatives of the Antitrust Division, you asked that this Department express its views with respect to certain proposed amendments to subsections (a) and (b) of section 508, of H. R. 9176—

I may say that is the section to which the Senator's amendment is offered. The Attorney General sets out those proposed amendments, adding the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and says:

In view of the Attorney General's responsibility for the enforcement of the antitrust laws and his close familiarity with the operation of the Federal Trade Commission Act as well, both by virtue of his position as the chief law officer of the Government and his direct responsibility for enforcement of orders entered under the latter act, we are satisfied that the Attorney General could discharge his responsibilities under the provision requiring his review of proposed exemptions, and that he could do so promptly, effectively, and without delaying the administration of the program contemplated by the Defense Production Act. This view is supported by our experience in the administration of similar statutes during World War II.

Considering the importance of the matter in question, the provision of it leaving the final decision to the President in the event of objection also seems desirable in principle.

Mr. President, I regret that I have really read the part which pertains to the amendment which I offered and which I later withdrew in committee, which the Attorney General asked. But in this same letter he proposes the other two amendments—that is, that we include the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission—and he asks further that it be included in the Defense Production Act.

It seems to me that he has indicated clearly in the letter that he is not afraid of any friction developing between the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission in administering the respective parts that belong to each.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Is not the Attorney General the official legal adviser for the Federal Trade Commission, aside from its inner-office activities?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I suppose he is, in the same sense that he is the official legal adviser to all Government departments.

Mr. BRICKER. To all Government departments.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true. And yet the Senator knows, of course, and I am sure he will agree with me, that every department and agency looks to its own legal department for its operations. The only thing about this, as I see it, is that the Department of Justice, and particularly the Antitrust Division, is concerned primarily with prosecutions, not with studies of acts which fall short of criminal liability.

Mr. BRICKER. But the Attorney General is not excluded from the jurisdiction to bring a civil suit.

Mr. SPARKMAN. He is not, and yet it is not primarily the function of the Department of Justice, and the Attorney General recognizes it in asking that the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission be associated with him in these two respects only. It is notice to the Federal Trade Commission of what is contemplated in the way of consultation with the Attorney General. There is nothing here to show he does not agree.

Mr. BRICKER. I would not object to the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission being notified of any agreements; in fact, I think he ought to be. But I should object to his having to be consulted as a prerequisite to any rule or order of the President concerning any allocation agreement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. My attention has been called to the fact that the way the Senator has his amendment drawn there is only one place at which it could be inserted in the bill, and that the notification provision is no longer a part of it, but that the consultation is. It would be my intention to offer to amend the Senator's amendment, on page 2, in line 12, after the words "the Attorney General", by inserting "and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission." I ask the Senator from Ohio whether it was his intention also to omit from his amendment the requirement that notice be published in the Federal Register.

Mr. BRICKER. If the agreement were entered into, yes. I read from the amendment:

The authority granted in subsection (b) shall only be delegated upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

I think notice would have to be filed in the Federal Register, anyway, under the other provision of the act. This brings the voluntary agreements in keeping with the orders of the President.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I recall, in section 708 (a) of the committee bill, not the Senator's amendment, there is a requirement that notice be published in the Federal Register. I merely wonder whether the Senator intended to omit that.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator refers to section 708.

Mr. SPARKMAN. On page 73 of the bill, section 708 (a), line 16.

Mr. BRICKER. The President has the right to accept it if he cares to. I did not think it was either essential or important, so far as the amendment is concerned. It would not make it any more valid. It is no better public notice than to put it in the public press, possibly not even as good public notice.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it strikes out section 712 of the bill.

Mr. BRICKER. That is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In section 712 we have a requirement that it be published in the Federal Register. As I say, I have no strong feelings with regard to it, but it seems to me it should be published in the Federal Register.

Mr. BRICKER. I have no objection to that at all. I simply thought it was not essential or necessary to do it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It seems to me that there should be a requirement that it be published in the Federal Register.

Mr. BRICKER. I shall be glad to accept such a modification, and I would so modify my amendment as to require publication in the Federal Register.

Has the Senator submitted an amendment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No. I should be glad to, or to have the Senator submit one.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio by inserting in line 19, on page 2, of the Senator's amendment, after the word "hereunder," the words "and publication in the Federal Register thereof."

Mr. BRICKER. I accepted that modification.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I should like to offer a further modification, which I hope the Senator will accept. On line 12, page 2, of the Senator's amendment, after the words "Attorney General," I suggest the insertion of the words "and with the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

Mr. BRICKER. I shall be glad to have that put to a vote, but I do not accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of Mr. BRICKER on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to insert after the words "Attorney General" the words "and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio one further question. My attention has been called to the fact that the reference to publication in the Federal Register ought to occur in two places in the amendment. If the Senator will look at page 73 of the bill, in section 708 (a), line 16, he will see that there is a provision in that section which reads as follows: "and it shall be published in the Federal Register."

Just before that it is provided as follows:

A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register.

I wonder if the Senator would be agreeable to accepting that language.

Mr. BRICKER. I shall be glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I offer that further modification, Mr. President, that on page 2 of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, in line 9, after the words "United States," there be inserted a new sentence——

Mr. BRICKER. That is where it was put in before.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; it was in line 19. I am now referring to line 9.

Mr. President, if it is acceptable to the Senator from Ohio, I should like to insert the sentence which is in the bill on page 73, which brings it into line, so far as notice is concerned.

Mr. BRICKER. I thought that was what was amended awhile ago. Is it to be inserted at the end of paragraph (b), in line 9, page 2, of my amendment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. I should like to have the Senator refer to the sentence on page 73 of the bill, which, if it is acceptable to him, I should like to add at the point in his amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator from Alabama wants to insert after the words "United States", the language of section 708 (a) down through line 18.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. That is in regard to the filing with the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission and publishing in the Federal Register, beginning at line 12, and ending with line 18.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. That is satisfactory. It would read as follows:

A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

There should be such a sentence added to subsection (b) of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BRICKER. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as amended, and modified.

The amendment, as amended and modified, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, there does not seem to be any Senator on our side of the aisle who has any further amendments to offer or who cares to speak.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has a 5-minute speech which he would like to make.

Mr. CAPEHART. I shall be very happy to listen to it.

TRADE BETWEEN ENGLAND AND RUSSIA

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, from the first shot at the thirty-eighth parallel last June 26, the United States never has had any misapprehension that this is a situation which calls now, not eventually, for total preparedness. There will be no half measures taken by the Communist aggressors; there can be none taken by us.

The peril created by Soviet armed aggression in Korea cannot be stressed too heavily.

The Soviet Union's hand becomes exposed more clearly each day in the Korean conflict. There is a constant threat, in Asia as well as in Europe, that a similar outbreak will occur. As long as our strength grows in the one area where our forces are committed, Soviet purposes will be served by setting aflame, either as an attempt to divert our forces or to probe for the weak link in freedom's chain.

I am attempting to be dispassionate. But the situation is grave, and only a corner of Russia's strategy so far has been unfolded. The maneuvers of Jacob Malik in the United Nations Security Council and his propagandist tirades against the United States within the past week have helped fill in communism's ominous design.

The Soviet Union is strong, not only in its own resources but also in the manpower and wealth it can extract from its satellites. The United States, we believe, is stronger. We do not have satellites. We neither pretend to pull the strings, nor do we want to pull the strings of puppets. Our strength derives from the willing support of other members of the United Nations, which like us, believe in peace. So far, many of these nations either have failed to recognize how great the danger is, or have failed to meet their responsibilities. War materials for Communist China still flow from British Hongkong. Rubber, copper, lead, tin, and machinery, all of which are potential weapons to add to our danger and intensify our sacrifices, are exported under British license to Red China.

Britain continues to play into Communist hands by its insistence on recognizing Red China, despite the fact that Communist China refuses to grant her recognition. It should be clear even to British statesmen that Red China is a puppet of the power which is trying to throttle Britain's own way of life. That power is Soviet Russia.

Mr. President, in addition to dealing with Red China while our troops are fighting and dying in nearby Korea, according to the best information available Great Britain is apparently also dealing directly with Soviet Russia, which is the arsenal of its North Korean puppet. She is sending to Russia valuable machinery, thus augmenting Russian industry, and is supplying the machinery in exchange for Soviet crab meat, which Britain, in turn, is trying to dump on us. Only yesterday the British attempted to unload on us 160,000 pounds of Soviet-produced crab meat, which it now owns by reason of its barter deal in supplying Russia with British-made machinery. There has been some suggestion made, by those who apparently are not completely informed of the facts, that this crab meat is a direct sale in our country in violation of tariff provisions or because we do not have proper tariff prohibitions against such shipments directly from Russia. However, it is a British attempt to sell us the crab meat.

Longshoremen in New York refused to handle the shipment last week, and news dispatches say the British freighter with the crab meat aboard has moved on to Boston. I think it can be taken for granted that British efforts to dump the shipment of crab meat on us will continue. It seems to be adding insult to injury. It is surely playing Russia's game not only by helping to build Russia's industrial potential, but by trying to unload Russian products in this country in competition with America's own struggling fisheries industries. This is not a mark of friendship or of unity between two great English-speaking democracies. It seems to be cold-blooded British commercialism.

Mr. President, the time has come to ask: Is Britain on the side of the democracies, or is Britain straddling the issue, waiting to see where her pocketbook will best be served? If Great Britain continues to put trade above our united efforts in the war she will become, unfortunately, a bad risk. We hope such situations will not continue, because we know the heart of the British people is entirely different. However, if these instances continue, and until Great Britain recognizes the fact that the lives of our boys and the lives of boys of other members of the United Nations are more important than the profits of her traders, she should not be qualified to receive further military or economic support from this country.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hendrickson	Morse
Anderson	Hickenlooper	Mundt
Benton	Hill	Murray
Brewster	Hoey	Myers
Bricker	Holland	Neely
Butler	Humphrey	O'Conor
Byrd	Hunt	O'Mahoney
Capehart	Ives	Pepper
Chapman	Johnson, Colo.	Robertson
Chavez	Johnson, Tex.	Russell
Connally	Johnston, S. C.	Saltonstall
Cordon	Kefauver	Schoeppel
Darby	Kem	Smith, Maine
Donnell	Kerr	Smith, N. J.
Douglas	Kilgore	Sparkman
Downey	Knowland	Stennis
Dworshak	Langer	Taft
Eastland	Lehman	Thomas, Okla.
Ecton	Lodge	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Long	Thye
Ferguson	Lucas	Tydings
Frear	McCarran	Watkins
Fulbright	McKellar	Wherry
George	McMahon	Wiley
Gillette	Magnuson	Williams
Graham	Malone	Withers
Green	Martin	Young
Gurney	Maybank
Hayden	Millikin

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I was about to address the distinguished minority leader, because we have been working for some time, I might say for some days, in an effort to complete the legislation we are considering, for the benefit of the people of the United States. Every day we delay means that much more harm done to the people. It is my belief that we can work out a unanimous-consent agreement, and I believe that is why the Senator from Indiana called for a quorum.

I have been in conference with the Senator from Nebraska and with the Parliamentarian in the hope that something might be prepared looking to a final vote on the bill. I appreciate, as does every other Senator, that many Senators have engagements, but the issues before us in this bill are far more important than any engagement any Senator may have.

The President wrote to the Banking and Currency Committee that time was of the essence. The committee have been considering the bill since the 19th of July. We were hopeful that the bill would be passed as the committee reported it, and that whatever amendments were desired, could be voted upon separately. Whatever sections of the bill the Senate wishes to vote up or down can be voted up or down, but I think something should be done as soon as possible. With that understanding I have conferred with the minority leader and we have prepared a unanimous-consent request which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Friday, August 18, 1950, during the further consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, debate upon any amendment or motion (including appeals) that may be pending or that may be thereafter proposed including the amendment proposed today by Mr. MUNDT (for himself and Mr. FERGUSON), and upon the bill itself shall be limited to not exceeding 10 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the mover of such amendment or motion and the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. MAYBANK]: Provided, That amendments intended to be proposed submitted hereafter shall be germane to the subject matter of the said bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that that is a simple agreement satisfactory to the distinguished minority leader and myself, after discussion with the Parliamentarian, subject, of course, to the wishes of the Senate. Of course, the time would be divided between the present ranking Republican member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], and myself. We are hopeful that the agreement may be entered into, because if we go over another weekend without passing the bill, it might be that it will not be passed until another week has passed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not believe the unanimous-consent request included that we were to start voting on all amendments at 1 o'clock on Friday. I did not hear any such provision read. Does the unanimous-consent request mean that, or do we vote on amendments prior to 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is when limitation of debate would begin.

Mr. WHERRY. There should be no vote on any amendments prior to 1 o'clock. If we are to enter into the unanimous consent agreement I should like to have that provision included.

Mr. MAYBANK. The agreement was that there be no votes between 12 and 1 o'clock, but that the time between 12 and 1 be left open for routine matters being presented for the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the unanimous consent request modified to include the proviso that voting on all amendments shall begin at 1 o'clock, and not prior thereto.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator does not mean that we may not vote on amendments tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly do. We should have a unanimous consent agreement to vote on all amendments beginning at 1 o'clock, and Senators will be put on notice to that effect. We can then discuss the bill from now until 1 o'clock Friday, but Friday at 1 o'clock we begin voting on all amendments. That is the only proper way to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement. Then every Senator will know when we are going to vote on all the amendments.

Mr. President, the time is limited to 10 minutes on each amendment. That should be made plain to every Senator. That means only 5 minutes to each side, including the debate on the bill itself. That is contained in the agreement.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska understands that between now and 1 o'clock on Friday unlimited time will be given to debating the amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly; or for debate on anything.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. But no votes are to be had on any amendments until 1 o'clock on Friday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair make an inquiry? Do the two Senators agree on amending the request to cover the point expressly that there shall be no vote until 1 o'clock on Friday? The Chair understands that is agreed upon.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to inquire whether it is understood that the limitation of debate will begin at 1 o'clock on Friday; that no vote will be taken prior to that, but that votes will be taken after 1 o'clock, following the debate?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. MAYBANK. Unlimited debate may be had until 1 o'clock on Friday.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield for a question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is not included in the unanimous consent request, and I am not even suggesting that it should be there, but I believe it would be well, and I think we all might express the hope, that any Senator having an amendment to offer would offer it by the time the Senate takes a recess on Thursday.

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I say there should be no such requirement, but I think it would be a good thing for Senators having amendments to offer, at least to let them be printed and lie on the table so that other Senators would be familiar with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a request, but not a part of the unanimous consent request.

Is there objection to the unanimous consent request?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, please let me urge that we vote on Thursday instead of Friday for the following reason: The annual convention of the Young Democratic Clubs of West Virginia will be held in Huntington from next Thursday morning until next Saturday night. The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] has been advertised as the convention's speaker for Friday afternoon. The able senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] will also address the convention on that day.

Speaking not only for myself, but for the thousands of other West Virginians who will attend the convention in the hope of hearing these eminent senatorial orators I entreat the Senate to vote on the pending bill on Thursday, or postpone its final action until next Monday.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I want to say to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], for whom we all have the greatest affection, and to his distinguished colleague [Mr. KILGORE], and to my good friend from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], who is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, that we were hopeful we could finish the proposed legislation this week. The Senator from West Virginia suggested that we vote tomorrow. Unfortunately the Senator from Nebraska put off offering his amendments until tomorrow, and I put off mine also. I sent them to the desk this afternoon to be printed. I do not see exactly how we can possibly vote on those amendments until Friday.

We have discussed the matter, and I hope the Senator from West Virginia will agree to the proposal to vote on Friday. I also have been invited to speak on Friday, and refused the invitation. I do not know how the Senator from Alabama fels about the matter. If we can complete action on this bill this week we will move far toward a reasonably early recess.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is waiting to bring up a tax bill from the Finance Committee. Matters are being brought in from other committees. I hope action on the pending bill will not be put off over the week end, because then consideration of the bill will be continued into next week, thus causing considerable delay.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder why we cannot vote on the bill on Thursday. Considerable time has already been used in debating the bill. It seems to me that it already has been considered rather thoroughly. So I cannot understand why an extra day is required and why Friday is selected as the day for the vote to be taken. It seems to me that, in all fairness, an arrangement should be made to have the vote taken on Thursday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The answer to the question posed by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia is that a few minutes ago the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], said he would like to go to Illinois to address a Democratic convention there; I think it is to be a meeting at the State fair, and I think he regards it as a very important meeting.

The exact date when the vote is taken is immaterial to me. If we worked hard enough and long enough, I think we might be able to persuade Senators to cancel any conflicting engagements and to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to have the vote taken earlier in the week.

However, at the suggestion of the distinguished majority leader, we contacted everyone concerned, and finally we worked out agreement to have the vote taken on Friday.

I am willing to try to work out an agreement to have the vote taken tomorrow, so far as that is concerned. However, certainly all Senators realize that there are a number of amendments, many of which have not yet even been offered, and they would not have much chance to be debated—especially the amendment relating to the handling of supplies through the normal channels of trade—if we were to advance the date for the vote on the bill.

I have a press report to the effect that the majority leader said that after a meeting of the Democratic policy committee he hoped to obtain agreement to have the vote taken on Monday on the economic-control bill. I wonder whether that statement to the press was made after the agreement now before us was proposed.

In any event, I am agreeable to having the Senate reach an agreement which will be acceptable to everyone concerned.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has suggested that I am scheduled to speak at a meeting of the Young Democrats in West Virginia on Friday afternoon. I wish to say that when I accepted the invitation, some 2 months ago, I thought I would be going to that meeting directly from Alabama, and that the Senate would not then be in session.

I wish to say that during the time I have been in Congress I have never requested the postponement of a vote on any measure by reason of my being absent; nor have I ever objected to a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, even though it required me to cancel an engagement.

I also wish to make it very clear that I have not made any such request at this time.

Naturally I have looked forward with great interest to the meeting in West Virginia. I always look forward with pleasure and interest to any meeting with good Democrats, and my appetite has been particularly whetted by the statement of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that there will be 9,000 or 10,000 good Democrats at the meeting in West Virginia. Naturally I should like to be there, but I wish the RECORD to show that I am not asking that the arrangement now proposed be changed because of my situation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from West Virginia knows nothing whatever about the observations which were made by the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] except what was stated a moment ago by the distinguished minority leader [Mr. WHERRY]. I did not know that the Senator from Illinois had suggested that the vote on the bill be cast on Monday. Personally, I prefer that the Senate dispose of this important matter tomorrow or Thursday. I do not wish to delay action. But in my opinion, except the saving of immortal souls, the most important thing this side of the grave to the people of the world is the success of the Democratic Party in the approaching election. The success of the Democratic Party in the Nation is largely dependent upon its success in West Virginia. The Democratic success in West Virginia is largely dependent upon the speech which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] has promised to deliver in Huntington next Friday.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to say that the success of the Democratic Party in South Carolina has already been assured.

Mr. NEELY. Unhappily, in West Virginia we do not complete our voting until November. Although the political situation in West Virginia is highly satisfactory it nevertheless requires the formality of ratification at the polls.

Mr. President, let me entreat the Senator from South Carolina in behalf of the Democratic Party and the prosperity and happiness of the world, to postpone the proposed consent agreement until tomorrow. In the meantime let us negotiate with the always accommodating, lovable leader of the minority, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], an arrangement by means of which we can vote on the bill on Thursday instead of Friday.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have conferred with the minority leader, and I should like to amend the proposed unanimous-consent agreement by substituting the word "Monday" for the word "Friday." I hope that change will be agreeable to everyone concerned.

So I modify the unanimous-consent agreement by striking out the word "Friday" and inserting the word "Monday," so as to provide that the vote be taken on Monday next at 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has modified the proposed unanimous-consent agreement by substituting the word "Monday" for the word "Friday"; otherwise the requested unanimous-consent agreement is the same as when previously proposed.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement as now proposed? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement as entered into is, as follows:

Ordered, That after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, August 21, 1950, during the further consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, debate upon any amendment or motion (including appeals) that may be pending or that may be thereafter proposed, including the amendment proposed today by Mr. MUNDT (for himself and Mr. FERGUSON), and upon the bill itself shall be limited to not exceeding 10 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the mover of such amendment or motion and the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. MAYBANK]: Provided, That amendments intended to be proposed, submitted hereafter, shall be germane to the subject matter of the said bill: Provided further, That no vote on any amendment or motion shall be had prior to said hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on Monday next.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MAYBANK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will call the executive calendar.

TREATY

The treaty, Executive K (80th Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty of extradition between the United States of America and the Union of South Africa, was announced as first in order.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask that the treaty be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the treaty will be passed over.

The nominations on the calendar will be stated.

ADVISORY BOARD FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Morris L. Ernst, of New York, to be a member of the Advisory Board for the Post Office Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, because of the confusion existing in the Chamber, it has been difficult to hear; but do I correctly understand that the nomination of Morris L. Ernst has just been stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The Senate will be in order, so that all Senators may understand the business being transacted.

Mr. MAYBANK. That nomination has been stated and is before the Senate now, as I understand.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination be passed over, and that we proceed to take up the new reports on the executive calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

The clerk will state the new reports on the executive calendar.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Thomas H. Roberts to be United States district judge for the district of Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harvey L. Carey to be United States attorney for the western district of Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Leo A. Casey to be United States marshal for the northern district of West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That concludes the nominations on the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska, the distinguished minority leader, yield to the Senator from Texas for the purpose of calling up a treaty which is on the executive calendar?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the treaty on the calendar is not of a great deal of importance. It is a treaty with the Union of South Africa and relates to extradition. I see no reason why it should not be considered at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well; I have no objection to its immediate consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty (Executive K, 80th Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty of extradition between the United States of America and the Union of South Africa, signed at Washington on December 18, 1947, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY OF EXTRADITION WITH THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

The President of the United States of America,

And His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, acting for the Union of South Africa,

Desiring to make more adequate provision for the reciprocal extradition of criminals,

Have resolved to conclude a Treaty for that purpose, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries,

The President of the United States of America:

Robert A. Lovett, Acting Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, for the Union of South Africa:

Harry Thomson Andrews, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Union of South Africa at Washington;

Who, having communicated their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other, under certain circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty, those persons who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences enumerated in article 3, committed within the jurisdiction of the one Party, shall be found within the territory of the other Party.

ARTICLE 2

For the purposes of the present Treaty:

(a) the territory of His Majesty shall be deemed to be the Union of South Africa together with any territory at any time under the jurisdiction of His Majesty's Government in the Union of South Africa whether as mandated territory, protectorate, or otherwise, if said Treaty is extended to that territory under Article 14; and

(b) the territory of the United States of America shall be deemed to be all territory wherever situated belonging to the United States of America, including its dependencies and all other territories under its exclusive administration or control.

ARTICLE 3

Extradition shall be reciprocally granted for the following crimes or offences:

1. Murder, or attempt or conspiracy to murder.
2. Culpable homicide or manslaughter.
3. Assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm; maliciously wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm.
4. Any act done with intent to endanger the safety or lives of persons travelling upon a railway.
5. Abortion or attempted abortion.
6. Rape.
7. Indecent assault.
8. Unlawful carnal knowledge, or any attempt to have unlawful carnal knowledge, of a girl under sixteen years of age.
9. Abduction.
10. Procuration, i. e., the procuring even with her own consent of a woman or girl under age for immoral purposes or of a woman or girl over age, to become a common prostitute, or the procuring, by threats, intimidation or false pretences of a woman or girl to have unlawful carnal connection, provided that such crime or offence is punishable by imprisonment for at least one year or by more severe punishment.
11. Bigamy.
12. Kidnapping or man-stealing, including woman-stealing and child-stealing.
13. Illtreatment, neglect or abandonment of a child.
14. False imprisonment.
15. Robbery with violence.
16. Extortion.
17. Arson.
18. Malicious injury to property.
19. Burglary or housebreaking with intent to commit an offence.
20. Larceny or theft including embezzlement.
21. Receiving money, valuable security or other property, knowing the same to have been stolen, embezzled or obtained by false pretences.
22. Fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, director, member or officer of any company, or the obtaining of money, valuable security or other property by false pretences.
23. Forgery or uttering what has been forged.
24. Counterfeiting or altering money, or uttering counterfeit or altered money.
25. Being in possession of any implement with intent to make counterfeit coin therewith or with the aid thereof.
26. Contraventions of the insolvency or bankruptcy laws.
27. Crimes or offences against any enactment relating to dangerous drugs, or attempts to commit such crimes or offences.
28. Bribery, i. e., the offering, giving or receiving of bribes.

a previous meeting should appear first on the Council's agenda.

MEETING OF AUGUST 3

Following an exchange between the British and Soviet representatives with respect to the procedural situation and to Korea, an intervention by the Indian representative to the effect that the question of which items should be included on the agenda should be separated from that of their priority, which was supported by the Egyptian delegate; a Yugoslav statement of abstention; and a French declaration of support for the United States item; President Malik ruled that the Council would vote first on the Chinese representation item, second on peaceful settlement in Korea, and third on the United States item, Korean aggression. The British representative challenged the ruling, and on a vote it was rejected by seven votes (China, Cuba, Ecuador, France, Norway, United Kingdom, United States) to two (India, U. S. S. R.), with two abstentions (Egypt, Yugoslavia).

The United States amendment that the first agenda item should be "Complaint of aggression upon the Republic of Korea" was then put to the vote and accepted by a vote of eight in favor (China, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Norway, United Kingdom, United States), one against (U. S. S. R.), and two abstentions (India, Yugoslavia). The Indian representative explained that his abstention related only to the priority of consideration of the item, and not to its inclusion on the agenda.

The Council then voted on the inclusion of the item, "Recognition of the representative of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China as the representative of China." The proposal was lost since the vote resulted in a tie, five for (India, Norway, U. S. S. R., United Kingdom, Yugoslavia), five against (China, Cuba, Ecuador, France, United States), with Egypt abstaining. Finally, the Council voted on inclusion of the item, "Peaceful settlement of the Korean question," which was rejected by a vote of seven (China, Cuba, Ecuador, France, Norway, United Kingdom, United States) to three (Egypt, India, U. S. S. R.), with Yugoslavia abstaining.

MEETING OF AUGUST 4

The Soviet representative introduced a resolution under which the Security Council would decide (a) to consider it necessary to invite the representative of the People's Republic of China and also to hear representatives of the Korean people in the course of the discussion of the Korean question and (b) to put an end to the hostilities in Korea and at the same time to withdraw foreign troops from Korea. The remainder of the meeting was devoted to debate over a Chinese motion, supported by the United States, Egypt, United Kingdom, India and Norway, to seat the representative of the Republic of Korea in accordance with the previous decision of the Council to this effect. The British representative asked for separate votes on the invitation of the representative of the Republic of Korea and that of the representative of North Korea. The Chinese representative believed the representative of the Republic of Korea should be invited automatically. The Indian representative believed the vote should be as to whether to cancel the previous invitation to the representative of the Republic of Korea. The President refused to make any ruling on the matter, and the meeting adjourned without decision (exhibit VI).

MEETING OF AUGUST 8

The procedural debate regarding the seating of a representative of the Republic of Korea was resumed but no decision was reached, the Soviet President continuing to refuse to issue any ruling, although he was willing to put the question to a vote in the form of whether members supported or opposed the view that the Council's June 25 decision to seat the representative of the Republic of Korea was still in force. The British representative pointed out that putting the question in this way would permit a Soviet veto and accordingly suggested adjournment.

At the beginning of the meeting President Malik referred to a cable from the North Korean Minister of Foreign Affairs complaining of United States air bombings and machine gunning, and at its close tabled a resolution concerning "inhuman bombing" by the United States Air Force of peaceful population, towns, and populated areas in Korea, under which the Council would recognize such bombings as a violation of international law, would call on the United States to stop such bombing and not permit it in future, and would instruct the Secretary-General to bring this decision immediately to the attention of the United States Government (exhibit VII).

Following sharp exchanges between Austin and Malik respecting the nature of the Korean situation and responsibilities therefor, Ambassador Austin proposed that the Council adjourn until 3 p. m. August 10 to allow the Soviet representative to consult his Government in the interest of obtaining instructions which would enable the Council to function and the Soviet representative to rule on the matter before the Council. During this time he suggested that other members could consult on steps to be taken in the event the Soviet Government continued its present attitude. President Malik proposed adjournment until August 9, at which time he asked that the Council consider his motion on bombing of civilian population in Korea. However, he put the United States motion for adjournment to August 10 to the vote first, and it was adopted by nine votes in favor, with one against (U. S. S. R.), and one abstention (Yugoslavia).

EXHIBIT I

RESOLUTION CONCERNING THE COMPLAINT OF AGGRESSION UPON THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA ADOPTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-THIRD MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL ON JUNE 25, 1950

The Security Council—

Recalling the finding of the General Assembly in its resolution of October 21, 1949, that the government of the Republic of Korea is a lawfully established government "having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea was able to observe and consult and in which the great majority of the people of Korea reside; and that this government is based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the Temporary Commission; and that this is the only such government in Korea";

Mindful of the concern expressed by the General Assembly in its resolutions of December 12, 1948 and October 21, 1949, of the consequences which might follow unless member states refrained from acts derogatory to the results sought to be achieved by the United Nations in bringing about the complete independence and unity of Korea; and the concern expressed that the situation described by the United Nations Commission on Korea in its report menaces the safety and well being of the Republic of Korea and of the people of Korea and might lead to open military conflict there;

Noting with grave concern the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea—

Determines that this action constitutes a breach of the peace,

I. Calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities; and Calls upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel;

II. Requests the United Nations Commission on Korea—

(a) To communicate its fully considered recommendations on the situation with the least possible delay;

(b) To observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel; and

(c) To keep the Security Council informed on the execution of this resolution.

III. Calls upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

EXHIBIT II

RESOLUTION CONCERNING THE COMPLAINT OF AGGRESSION UPON THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA ADOPTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FOURTH MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL ON JUNE 27, 1950

The Security Council—

Having determined that the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea constitutes a breach of the peace,

Having called for an immediate cessation of hostilities, and

Having called upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel, and

Having noted from the report of the United Nations Commission for Korea that the authorities in North Korea have neither ceased hostilities nor withdrawn their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel and that urgent military measures are required to restore international peace and security, and

Having noted the appeal from the Republic of Korea to the United Nations for immediate and effective steps to secure peace and security, Recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

EXHIBIT III

RESOLUTION CONCERNING THE COMPLAINT OF AGGRESSION UPON THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA ADOPTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SIXTH MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL ON JULY 7, 1950

The Security Council—

Having determined that the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea constitutes a breach of the peace,

Having recommended that members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area,

1. Welcomes the prompt and vigorous support which governments and peoples of the United Nations have given to its resolutions of June 25 and June 27, 1950, to assist the Republic of Korea in defending itself against armed attack and thus to restore international peace and security in the area;

2. Notes that members of the United Nations have transmitted to the United Nations offers of assistance for the Republic of Korea;

3. Recommends that all members providing military forces and other assistance pursuant to the aforesaid Security Council resolutions make such forces and other assistance available to a unified command under the United States;

4. Requests the United States to designate the commander of such forces;

5. Authorizes the unified command at its discretion to use the United Nations flag in the course of operations against North

Korean forces concurrently with the flags of the various nations participating;

6. Requests the United States to provide the Security Council with reports as appropriate on the course of action taken under the unified command.

EXHIBIT IV

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA: DRAFT RESOLUTION SUBMITTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-NINTH MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL, JULY 31, 1950, CONCERNING THE COMPLAINT OF AGGRESSION UPON THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

The Security Council—

Condemns the North Korean authorities for their continued defiance of the United Nations;

Calls upon all states to use their influence to prevail upon the authorities of North Korea to cease this defiance;

Calls upon all states to refrain from assisting or encouraging the North Korean authorities and to refrain from action which might lead to the spread of the Korean conflict to other areas and thereby further endanger international peace and security.

EXHIBIT V

RESOLUTION CONCERNING KOREAN RELIEF ADOPTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-NINTH MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL ON JULY 31, 1950

The Security Council—Recognizing the hardships and privations to which the people of Korea are being subjected as a result of the continued prosecution by the North Korean forces of their unlawful attack; and

Appreciating the spontaneous offers of assistance to the Korean people which have been made by governments, specialized agencies, and non-governmental organizations;

Requests the unified command to exercise responsibility for determining the requirements for the relief and support of the civilian population of Korea, and for establishing in the field the procedures for providing such relief and support;

Requests the Secretary-General to transmit all offers of assistance for relief and support to the Unified Command;

Requests the Unified Command to provide the Security Council with reports as appropriate, on its relief activities;

Requests the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter, other appropriate United Nations principal and subsidiary organs, the specialized agencies in accordance with the terms of their respective agreements with the United Nations, and appropriate non-governmental organizations to provide such assistance as the Unified Command may request for the relief and support of the civilian population of Korea, and as appropriate in connection with the responsibilities being carried out by the Unified Command on behalf of the Security Council.

EXHIBIT VI

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS: DRAFT RESOLUTION CONCERNING THE COMPLAINT OF AGGRESSION UPON THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA, SUBMITTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-THIRD MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL, AUGUST 4, 1950

PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF THE KOREAN QUESTION

The Security Council decides—

(a) To consider it necessary, in the course of the discussion of the Korean question, to invite the representative of the People's Republic of China and also to hear representatives of the Korean people;

(b) To put an end to the hostilities in Korea and at the same time to withdraw foreign troops from Korea.

EXHIBIT VII

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS: DRAFT RESOLUTION CONCERNING THE COMPLAINT OF AGGRESSION UPON THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA, SUBMITTED AT THE FOUR HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FOURTH MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL, AUGUST 8, 1950

PROPOSAL CONCERNING THE INHUMAN, BARBAROUS BOMBING BY THE AMERICAN AIR FORCE OF THE PEACEFUL POPULATION, TOWNS AND POPULATED AREAS IN KOREA

The Security Council—

Having considered the protest of the Government of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea against the inhuman, barbarous bombing of the peaceful population and of peaceful towns and populated areas which is being carried out by the American Air Force in Korea;

Recognizing that the bombing by the American Armed Forces of Korea towns and villages, involving the destruction and mass annihilation of the peaceful civilian population is a gross violation of the universally accepted rules of international law;

Decides:

To call upon the Government of the United States of America to cease and not permit in future the bombing by the air force or by other means of towns and populated areas and also the shooting up from the air of the peaceful population in Korea;

To instruct the Secretary-General of the United Nations to bring this decision of the Security Council to the very urgent notice of the Government of the United States of America.

LAKE SUCCESS.—India's plan for a "Little Six" committee to blueprint a Korean peace settlement probably will be presented formally to the UN Security Council Thursday, it was learned.

Indian sources said the initial reaction to the plan had been good and Indian delegate Sir Benegal N. Rau hoped to have a draft of the proposal ready for the Thursday meeting.

While first indications were that the Indian formula might get the needed seven votes, the issue appeared to hinge on whether the Russians would veto it.

It was probable that in order to minimize the chances of a Soviet veto, the resolution would omit any reference to the June 25 Council decree calling on the North Koreans to cease fire and backtrack to the thirty-eighth parallel.

Rau said yesterday the committee of the Council's nonpermanent members could hear all proposals, but he emphasized that a settlement would have to be based on the June 25 decree.

However, Indian sources indicated the resolution might gloss over this point in order to keep the draft as inoffensive to the Russians as possible.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, before the minority leader offers certain amendments, as to which I should like to have his attention for a moment or two, I should like to make a brief statement. In view of the fact that we changed the unanimous-consent agreement so as to postpone the vote from Friday until Monday, I think it is the hope of the minority leader, as it certainly is mine and I trust of all Senators on this side of the aisle as well as on the other side, because I have talked with members of the Banking and Currency Committee on both sides, and any Senators having amendments will certainly offer them on Friday, so that members of the committee and Members of the Senate will have an opportunity to read them and study them. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska his opinion on that, since we changed the date.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am in complete accord with the statement made by the distinguished chairman, and that is that if any amendments are to be offered, if they can be offered by Friday, it would be beneficial to the membership of the Senate. They can be read and studied and members of the committee can make up their minds as to how they are going to vote on them. Certainly those who intend to offer amendments should offer them, if they can, and make their observations on them, so that the members of the committee may have time between now and Friday to go into the details of the amendments.

The only reason for my insisting, in the unanimous consent, upon the right to offer an amendment or make a motion up to the very time of voting, or thereafter, either way, is because something might develop in connection with the bill which would cause some Senator to offer an amendment to correct something, or to do this or that, and that right should be preserved. But certainly I agree with the acting majority leader that any Senator who has an amendment to offer should offer it as quickly as possible, and discuss it for the benefit of the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator from Nebraska has said. Of course, there might be some error which would call for an amendment, which would have to be offered, but we provided in the unanimous-consent agreement that amendments which were not germane could not be offered. Therefore, I hope that those who have amendments which are germane may be able to comply with the wishes of both sides.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk various amendments, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed and lie on the table.

FOREIGN POLICY CHARGES OF GOP STAND UP—ARTICLE BY GOULD LINCOLN

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Washington Star today carries an article by Gould Lincoln on foreign affairs. In view of Mr. Lincoln's objectivity as a political reporter and commentator his writings carry much weight. His article today is especially timely and I ask

2D SESSION

S. 3936

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

AUGUST 15 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950

AMENDMENTS

Intended to be proposed by Mr. FERGUSON (for himself and Mr. MUNDT) to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, viz: At the end of the bill insert a new title as follows:

TITLE VIII—SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES CONTROL ACT, 1950

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 801. This title may be cited as the "Subversive Activities Control Act, 1950".

NECESSITY FOR LEGISLATION

SEC. 802. As a result of evidence adduced before various committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, Congress hereby finds that—

(1) There exists a world Communist movement which in its origins, its development, and its present practice, is a world-wide revolutionary political movement whose purpose it is, by treachery, deceit, infiltration into other groups (governmental and otherwise), espionage, sabotage, terrorism, and any other means deemed necessary, to establish a Communist totalitarian dictatorship in all the countries of the world through the medium of a single world-wide Communist political organization.

(2) The establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship in any country results in the ruthless suppression of all opposition to the party in power, the complete subordination of the rights of individuals to the state, the denial of fundamental rights and liberties which are characteristic of a representative form of government, such as freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, and of religious worship, and results in the maintenance of control over the people through fear, terrorism, and brutality.

(3) The system of government known as a totalitarian dictatorship is characterized by the existence of a single political party, organized on a dictatorial basis, and by an identity between such party and its policies and the government and governmental policies of the country in which it exists, such identity being so close that the party and the government itself are for all practical purposes indistinguishable.

(4) The direction and control of the world Communist movement is vested in and exercised by the Communist dictatorship of a foreign country.

(5) The Communist dictatorship of such foreign country, in exercising such direction and control and in furthering the purposes of the world Communist movement, establishes or causes the establishment of, and utilizes, in various countries, political organizations which are acknowledged by such Communist dictatorship as being constituent elements of the world Communist movement; and such political organizations are not free and independent organizations, but are mere sections of a single world-wide Communist organization and are controlled, directed, and subject to the discipline of the Communist dictatorship of such foreign country.

(6) The political organizations so established and utilized in various countries, acting under such control, direction, and discipline, endeavor to carry out the objectives of the world Communist movement by bringing about the overthrow of existing governments and setting up Communist totalitarian dictatorships which will be subservient to the most powerful existing Communist totalitarian dictatorship. Although such Communist political organizations usually designate themselves as political parties, they are in fact constituent elements of the world-wide Communist movement and promote the objectives of such movement by conspiratorial and coercive tactics, instead of through the democratic processes of a free elective system or through the freedom-preserving means employed by a political party which operates as an agency by which people govern themselves.

(7) In carrying on the activities referred to in paragraph (6), such Communist organizations in various countries are organized on a secret, conspiratorial basis and operate to a substantial extent through organizations, commonly known as "Communist fronts", which in most instances are created and maintained, or used, in such manner as to conceal the facts as to their true character and purposes and their membership. One result of this method of operation is that such affiliated organizations are able to obtain financial and other support from persons who would not extend such support if they knew the true purposes of, and the actual nature of the control and influence exerted upon, such "Communist fronts".

(8) Due to the nature and scope of the world Communist movement, with the existence of affiliated constituent elements working toward common objectives in various countries of the world, travel of members, representatives, and agents from country to country is essential for purposes of communication and for the carrying on of activities to further the purposes of the movement.

(9) In the United States those individuals who knowingly and willfully participate in the world Communist movement, when they so participate, in effect repudiate their allegiance to the United States and in effect transfer their allegiance to the foreign country in which is vested the direction and control of the world Communist movement; and, in countries other than the United States, those individuals who knowingly and willfully participate in such Communist movement similarly repudiate their allegiance to the countries of which they are nationals in favor of such foreign Communist country.

(10) In pursuance of communism's stated objectives, the most powerful existing Communist dictatorship has, by the traditional Communist methods referred to above, and in accordance with carefully conceived plans, already caused the establishment in numerous foreign countries, against the will of the people of those countries, of ruthless Communist totalitarian dictatorships, and threatens to establish similar dictatorships in still other countries.

(11) The recent successes of Communist methods in other countries and the nature and control of the world Communist movement itself present a clear and present danger to the security of the United States and to the existence of free American institutions, and make it necessary that Congress, in order to provide for the common defense, to preserve the sovereignty of the United States as an independent nation, and to guarantee to each State a republican form of government, enact appropriate legislation recognizing the existence of such world-wide conspiracy and designed to prevent it from accomplishing its purpose in the United States.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 803. For the purposes of this title—

(1) The term "person" means an individual or an organization.

(2) The term "organization" means an organization, corporation, company, partnership, association, trust, foundation, or fund; and includes a group of persons, whether or not incorporated, permanently or temporarily associated together for joint action on any subject or subjects.

(3) The term "Communist political organization" means any organization in the United States having some, but not necessarily all, of the ordinary and usual characteristics of a political party, which (A) is substantially dominated or controlled by the foreign government or foreign governmental or political organization controlling the world Communist movement referred to in section 802, and (B) operates primarily to advance the objectives of such world Communist movement, as set forth in section 802 of this Act.

(4) The term "Communist-front organization" means any organization in the United States (other than a Communist political organization and other than a lawfully organized political party which is not a Communist political organization) which (A) is under the control of a Communist political organization, or (B) is primarily operated for the purpose of giving aid and support to a Communist political organization, a Communist foreign government, or the world Communist movement referred to in section 802.

(5) The term "Communist organization" means a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization.

(6) The term "publication" means any circular, newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, book, letter, post card, leaflet, or other publication.

(7) The term "United States", when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Canal Zone.

(8) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication (A) between any State, Territory, or possession of the United States (including the Canal Zone), or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof, or (B) within any Territory or possession of the United States (including the Canal Zone) or within the District of Columbia.

(9) The term "Board" means the Subversive Activities Control Board created by section 813 of this Act.

(10) The term "final order of the Board" means an order issued by the Board under section 814 of this Act, which has become final as provided in section 815 of this Act.

CERTAIN PROHIBITED ACTS

SEC. 804. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to combine, conspire, or agree with any other person to perform any act which would substantially contribute to the establishment within the United States of a totalitarian dictatorship the direction and control of which is to be vested in, or exercised by or under the domination or control of, any foreign government, foreign organization, or foreign individual. For purposes of this subsection, the term "totalitarian dictatorship" means a form of government, characterized by (1) the existence of a single political party, with such identity between such party and its policies and the government and governmental policies of the country in which it exists as to render such party and the government itself indistinguishable for all practical purposes, and (2) the forcible suppression of all opposition to such party.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States or of any department or agency thereof, or of any corporation the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by the United States or any department or agency thereof, to communicate in any manner or by any means, to any other person whom such officer or employee knows or has reason to believe to be an agent or representative of any foreign government or an officer or member of any Communist organization as defined in paragraph (5) of section 803 of this Act, any information of a kind which shall have been classified by the President (or by the head of any such department, agency, or corporation with the approval of the President) as affecting the security of the United States, knowing or having reason to know that such information has been so classified, unless such officer or employee shall have been specially authorized by the head of such department, agency, or corporation to make such disclosure of such information.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any agent or representative of any foreign government, or any officer or member of any Communist organization as defined in paragraph (5) of section 803 of this Act, knowingly to obtain or receive, or attempt to obtain or receive, directly or indirectly, from any officer or employee of the United States or of any department or agency thereof or of any corporation the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by the United States or any department or agency thereof, any information of a kind which shall have been classified pursuant to subsection (b) of this section as affecting the security of the United States, unless special authorization for such communication shall first have been obtained from the head of the department, agency, or corporation having custody of or control over such information.

(d) Any person who violates any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or by both such fine and such imprisonment, and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to hold any office, or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

(e) Any person may be prosecuted, tried, and punished for any violation of this section at any time within ten years after the commission of such offense, notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute of limitations.

(f) Neither the holding of office nor membership in any Communist organization by any person shall constitute a violation of subsection (a) or subsection (c) of this section. The fact of the registration of any person under section 807 or section 808 of this Act as an officer or member of any Communist organization shall not be received in evidence against such person in any prosecution for any alleged violation of subsection (a) or subsection (c) of this section.

EMPLOYMENT OF MEMBERS OF COMMUNIST POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 805. (a) When an organization is registered, or there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring an organization to register as a Communist political organization, it shall be unlawful for any member of such organization, with knowledge that such order has become final—

(1) in seeking or accepting any office or employment under the United States, to conceal the fact that he is a member of such organization; or

(2) to hold any nonelective office or employment under the United States.

(b) When an organization is registered or there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring an organization to register as a Communist political organization, it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States to appoint or employ any individual as an officer or employee of the United States, knowing that such individual is a member of such an organization.

(c) As used in this section, the term "member" shall not include any individual whose name has not been made public because of the prohibition contained in section 9 (b) of this Act.

DENIAL OF PASSPORTS TO MEMBERS OF COMMUNIST POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 806. (a) When an organization is registered, or there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring an organization to register as a Communist political organization, it shall be unlawful for any member of such organization, with knowledge that such order has become final—

(1) to make application for a passport, or the renewal of a passport, to be issued or renewed by or under the authority of the United States; or

(2) to use or attempt to use any such passport.

(b) When an organization is registered, or there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring an organization to register as a Communist political organization, it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States to issue a passport to, or renew the passport of, any individual knowing or having reason to believe that such individual is a member of such organization.

(c) As used in this section, the term "member" shall not include any individual whose name has not been made public because of the prohibition contained in section 809 (b) of this Act.

REGISTRATION AND ANNUAL REPORTS OF COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 807. (a) Each Communist political organization (including any organization required, by a final order of the Board, to register as a Communist political organization) shall, within the time specified in subsection (c) of this section, register with the Attorney General, on a form prescribed by him by regulations, as a Communist political organization.

(b) Each Communist-front organization (including any organization required, by a final order of the Board, to register as a Communist-front organization) shall, within the time specified in subsection (c) of this section, register with the Attorney General, on a form prescribed by him by regulations, as a Communist-front organization.

(c) The registration required by subsection (a) or (b) shall be made—

(1) in the case of an organization which is a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization on the date of the enactment of this Act, within thirty days after such date;

(2) in the case of an organization becoming a

Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization after the date of the enactment of this Act, within thirty days after such organization becomes a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization, as the case may be; and

(3) in the case of an organization which by a final order of the Board is required to register, within thirty days after such order becomes final.

(d) The registration made under subsection (a) or (b) shall be accompanied by a registration statement, to be prepared and filed in such manner and form as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, containing the following information:

(1) The name of the organization and the address of its principal office.

(2) The name and last-known address of each individual who is at the time of the filing of such registration statement, and of each individual who was at any time during the period of twelve full calendar months next preceding the filing of such statement an officer of the organization, with the designation or title of the office so held, and with a brief statement of the duties and functions of such individual as such officer.

(3) An accounting, in such form and detail as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, of all moneys received and expended (including the sources from which received and the purposes for which expended) by the organization during the period of twelve full calendar months next preceding the filing of such statement.

(4) In the case of a Communist political organization, the name and last-known address of each individual who was a member of the organization at any time during the period of twelve full calendar months preceding the filing of such statement.

(5) In the case of any officer or member whose name is required to be shown in such statement, and who uses or has used or who is or has been known by more than one name, each name which such officer or member uses or has used or by which he is known or has been known.

(e) It shall be the duty of each organization registered under this section to file with the Attorney General on or before February 1 of the year following the year in which it registers, and on or before February 1 of each succeeding year, an annual report, prepared and filed in such manner and form as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, containing the same information which by subsection (d) is required to be included in a registration statement, except that the information required with respect to the twelve-month period referred to in paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of such subsection shall, in such annual report, be given with respect to the calendar year preceding the February 1 on or before which such annual report must be filed.

(f) (1) It shall be the duty of each organization registered under this section to keep, in such manner and form as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, accurate records and accounts of moneys received and expended (including the sources from which received and purposes for which expended) by such organization.

(2) It shall be the duty of each Communist political organization registered under this section to keep, in such manner and form as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, accurate records of the names and addresses of the members of such organization and of persons who actively participate in the activities of such organization.

(g) It shall be the duty of the Attorney General to send to each individual listed in any registration statement or annual report, filed under this section, as an officer or member of the organization in respect of which such registration statement or annual report was filed, a notification in writing that such individual is so listed; and such notification shall be sent at the earliest practicable time after the filing of such registration statement or annual report. Upon written request of any individual so notified who denies that he holds any office or membership (as the case may be) in such organization, the Attorney General shall forthwith initiate and conclude at the earliest practicable time an appropriate investigation to determine the truth or falsity of such denial, and, if the Attorney General shall be satisfied that such denial is correct, he shall thereupon strike from such registration statement or annual report the name of such individual. If the Attorney General shall decline or fail to strike the name of such individual from such registration statement or annual report within five months after receipt of such written request, such individual may file with the Board a petition for relief pursuant to section 814 (b) of this Act.

(h) In the case of failure on the part of any organization to register or to file any registration statement or annual report as required by this section, it shall be the duty of the executive officer (or individual performing the ordinary and usual duties of an executive officer) and of the secretary (or individual performing the ordinary and usual duties of a secretary) of such organization, and of such officer or officers of such organization as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, to register for such organization, to file such registration statement, or to file such annual report, as the case may be.

REGISTRATION OF MEMBERS OF COMMUNIST POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 808. Each individual who is a member of any organization which he knows to be registered as a Communist political organization under section 807 (a) of this Act, but which has failed to include his name upon the list of members thereof filed with the Attorney General, shall within sixty days after he shall have obtained such knowledge register with the Attorney General as a member of such organization. The registration made by such individual shall be accompanied by a registration statement, to be prepared and filed in such manner and form, and containing such information, as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe.

KEEPING OF REGISTERS; PUBLIC INSPECTION; REPORTS TO PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS

SEC. 809. (a) The Attorney General shall keep and maintain separately in the Department of Justice—

(1) a "Register of Communist Political Organizations", which shall include (A) the names and addresses of all Communist political organizations registered under section 807, (B) the registration statements and annual reports filed by such organizations thereunder, and (C) the registration statements filed by individuals under section 808; and

(2) a "Register of Communist-Front Organizations", which shall include (A) the names and addresses of all Communist-front organizations registered under section 807, and (B) the registration statements and annual reports filed by such organizations thereunder.

(b) Such registers shall be kept and maintained in such manner as to be open for public inspection: Provided, That the Attorney General shall not make public the name of any individual listed in either such register as an officer or member of any Communist organization until sixty days shall have elapsed after the transmittal of the notification required by section 807 (g) to be sent to such individual and if prior to the end of such period such individual shall make written request to the Attorney General for the removal of his name from any such list, the Attorney General shall not make public the name of such individual until six months shall have elapsed after receipt of such request by the Attorney General, or until thirty days shall have elapsed after the Attorney General shall have denied such request and shall have transmitted to such individual notice of such denial, whichever is earlier.

(c) The Attorney General shall submit to the President and to the Congress on or before June 1 of each year (and at any other time when requested by either House by resolution) a report with respect to the carrying out of the provisions of this Act, including the names and addresses of the organizations listed in such registers and (except to the extent prohibited by subsection (b) of this section) the names and addresses of the individuals listed as members of such organizations.

MEMBERSHIP IN CERTAIN COMMUNIST POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 810. It shall be unlawful for any individual to become or remain a member of any organization if he knows that (1) there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring such organization to register under section 807 of this Act as a Communist political organization, (2) more than thirty days have elapsed since such order became final, and (3) such organization is not registered under section 807 of this Act as a Communist political organization.

USE OF THE MAILS AND INSTRUMENTALITIES OF INTERSTATE OR FOREIGN COMMERCE

SEC. 811. It shall be unlawful for any organization which is registered under section 807, or for any organization with respect to which there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring it to register under section 807, or for any person acting for or on behalf of any such organization—

(1) to transmit or cause to be transmitted, through the United States mails or by any means or instrumen-tality of interstate or foreign commerce, any publication which is intended to be, or which it is reasonable to believe is intended to be, circulated or disseminated among two or more persons, unless such publication, and any envelope, wrapper, or other container in which it is mailed or otherwise circulated or transmitted, bears the following, printed in such manner as may be provided in regulations prescribed by the Attorney General, with the name of the organization appearing in lieu of the blank: "Disseminated by ————, a Communist organization"; or

(2) to broadcast or cause to be broadcast any matter over any radio or television station in the United States, unless such matter is preceded by the following statement, with the name of the organization being stated in place of the blank: "The following program is spon sored by ————, a Communist organization".

DENIAL OF TAX DEDUCTIONS AND EXEMPTION

SEC. 812. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no deduction for Federal income-tax purposes shall be allowed in the case of a contribution to or for the use of any organization if at the time of the making of such contribution (1) such organization is registered under section 807, or (2) there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring such organization to register under section 807.

(b) No organization shall be entitled to exemption from Federal income tax, under section 101 of the Internal Revenue Code, for any taxable year if at any time during such taxable year (1) such organization is registered under section 807, or (2) there is in effect a final order of the Board requiring such organization to register under section 807.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES CONTROL BOARD

SEC. 813. (a) There is hereby established a Board, to be known as the Subversive Activities Control Board, which shall be composed of three members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. One of the original members shall be appointed for a term of one year, one for a term of two years, and one for a term of three years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of three years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. The President shall designate one member to serve as Chairman of the Board. Any member of the Board may be removed by the President, upon notice and hearing, for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

(b) A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Board, and two members of the Board shall, at all times, constitute a quorum. The Board shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(c) The Board shall at the close of each fiscal year make a report in writing to the Congress and to the President stating in detail the cases it has heard, the decisions it has rendered, the names, salaries, and duties of all employees of the Board, and an account of all moneys it has disbursed.

(d) Each member of the Board shall receive a salary of $12,500 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment.

(e) It shall be the duty of the Board—

(1) upon application made by the Attorney General under section 814 (a) of this Act, or by any organization under section 814 (b) of this Act, to determine whether any organization is a "Communist political organization" within the meaning of paragraph (3) of section 803 of this Act, or a "Communist-front organization" within the meaning of paragraph (4) of section 803 of this Act; and

(2) upon application made by the Attorney

General under section 814 (a) of this Act, or by any individual under section 814 (b) of this Act, to determine whether any individual is a member of any Communist political organization registered, or by final order of the Board required to be registered, under section 807 (a) of this Act.

(f) Subject to the civil-service laws and Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the Board may appoint and fix the compensation of a clerk and such examiners and other personnel as may be necessary for the performance of its functions.

(g) The Board may make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, as may be necessary for the performance of its duties.

(h) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Board such sums as may be necessary and appropriate to carry out its functions.

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE BOARD

SEC. 814. (a) Whenever the Attorney General shall have reason to believe that any organization which has not registered under subsection (a) or subsection (b) of section 807 of this Act is in fact an organization of a kind required to be registered under such subsection, or that any individual who has not registered under section 808 of this Act is in fact required to register under such section, he shall file with the Board and serve upon such organization or individual a petition for an order requiring such organization or individual to register pursuant to such subsection or section, as the case may be.

(b) Any organization registered under subsection (a) or subsection (b) of section 807 of this Act, and any individual registered under section 808 of this Act, may, not oftener than once in each calendar year, make application to the Attorney General for the cancellation of such registration and (in the case of such organization) for relief from obligation to make further annual reports. Within sixty days after the denial of any such application by the Attorney General, the organization or individual concerned may file with the Board and serve upon the Attorney General a petition for an order requiring the cancellation of such registration and (in the case of such organization) relieving such organization of obligation to make further annual reports. Any individual authorized by section 807 (g) of this Act to file a petition for relief may file with the Board and serve upon the Attorney General a petition for an order requiring the Attorney General to strike his name from the registration statement or annual report upon which it appears.

(c) Upon the filing of any petition pursuant to subsection (a) or subsection (b) of this section, the Board

(or any member thereof or any examiner designated thereby) may hold hearings, administer oaths and affirmations, may examine witnesses and receive evidence at any place in the United States, and may require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records deemed relevant to the matter under inquiry. Subpenas may be signed and issued by any member of the Board or any duly authorized examiner. Subpenas shall be issued on behalf of the organization or the individual who is a party to the proceeding upon request and upon a statement or showing of general relevance and reasonable scope of the evidence sought. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. Witnesses summoned shall be paid the same fees and mileage paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States. In case of disobedience to a subpena the Board may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear (and to produce documentary evidence if so ordered) and give evidence relating to the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found.

(d) All hearings conducted under this section shall be public. Each party to such proceeding shall have the right to present its case with the assistance of counsel, to offer oral or documentary evidence, to submit rebuttal evidence, and to conduct such cross-examination as may be required for a full and true disclosure of the facts. An accurate stenographic record shall be taken of the testimony of each witness, and a transcript of such testimony shall be filed in the office of the Board.

(e) In determining whether any organization is a "Communist political organization", the Board shall take into consideration—

(1) the extent to which its policies are formulated and carried out and its activities performed, pursuant to directives or to effectuate the policies of the foreign government or foreign governmental or political organization in which is vested, or under the domination or control of which is exercised, the direction and control of the world Communist movement referred to in section 802 of this Act;

(2) the extent to which its views and policies do not deviate from those of such foreign government or foreign organization;

(3) the extent to which it receives financial or other aid, directly or indirectly, from or at the direction of such foreign government or foreign organization;

(4) the extent to which it sends members or representatives to any foreign country for instruction or training in the principles, policies, strategy, or tactics of such world Communist movement;

(5) the extent to which it reports to such foreign government or foreign organization or to its representatives;

(6) the extent to which its principal leaders or a substantial number of its members are subject to or recognize the disciplinary power of such foreign government or foreign organization or its representatives;

(7) the extent to which (i) it fails to disclose, or resist efforts to obtain information as to, its membership (by keeping membership lists in code, by instructing members to refuse to acknowledge membership, or by any other method) ; (ii) its members refuse to acknowledge membership therein; (iii) it fails to disclose, or resist efforts to obtain information as to, records other than membership lists; (iv) its meetings are secret; and (v) it otherwise operates on a secret basis; and

(8) the extent to which its principal leaders or a substantial number of its members consider the allegiance they owe to the United States as subordinate to their obligations to such foreign government or foreign organization.

(f) In determining whether any organization is a "Communist-front organization", the Board shall take into consideration—

(1) the extent to which persons who are active in its management, direction, or supervision, whether or not holding office therein, are active in the management, direction, or supervision of, or as representatives of, any Communist political organization, Communist foreign government, or the world Communist movement referred to in section 802; and

(2) the extent to which its support, financial or otherwise, is derived from any Communist political organization, Communist foreign government, or the world Communist movement referred to in section 802; and

(3) the extent to which its funds, resources, or personnel are used to further or promote the political objectives of any Communist political organization, Communist foreign government or the world Communist movement referred to in section 802; and

(4) the extent to which the positions taken or advanced by it from time to time on matters of policy do not deviate from those of any Communist political organization, Communist foreign government, or the world Communist movement referred to in section 802.

(g) If, after hearing upon a petition filed under subsection (a) of this section, the Board determines—

(1) that an organization is a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization, as the case may be, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such organization an order requiring such organization to register as such under section 807 of this Act, or

(2) that an individual is a member of a Communist political organization (including an organization required by final order of the Board to register under section 807 (a)), it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such individual an order requiring him to register as such under section 808 of this Act.

(h) If, after hearing upon a petition filed under subsection (a) of this section, the Board determines—

(1) that an organization is not a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization, as the case may be, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts; issue and cause to be served upon the Attorney General an order denying his petition for an order requiring such organization to register as such under section 807 of this Act; and send a copy of such order to such organization; or

(2) that an individual is not a member of any Communist political organization, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts; issue and cause to be served upon the Attorney General an order denying his petition for an order requiring such individual to register as such member under section 808 of this Act; and send a copy of such order to such individual.

(i) If, after hearing upon a petition filed under subsection (b) of this section, the Board determines—

(1) that an organization is not a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization, as the case may be, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts; issue and cause to be served upon the Attorney General an order requiring him to cancel the registration of such organization and relieve it from the requirement of further annual reports; and send a copy of such order to such organization; or

(2) that an individual is not a member of any Communist political organization, or (in the case of an individual listed as an officer of a Communist-front organization) that an individual is not an officer of a Communist-front organization, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts; issue and cause to be served upon the Attorney General an order requiring him to (A) strike the name of such individual from the registration statement or annual report upon which it appears or (B) cancel the registration of such individual under section 808, as may be appropriate; and send a copy of such order to such individual.

(j) If, after hearing upon a petition filed under subsection (b) of this section, the Board determines—

(1) that an organization is a Communist political organization or a Communist-front organization, as the case may be, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such organization an order denying its petition for the cancellation of its registration and for relief from the requirement of further annual reports; or

(2) that an individual is a member of a Communist political organization, or (in the case of an individual listed as an officer of a Communist-front organization) that an individual is an officer of a Communist-front organization, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such individual an order denying his petition for an order requiring the Attorney General (A) to strike his name from any registration statement or annual report on which it appears or (B) to cancel the registration of such individual under section 808, as the case may be.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 815. (a) The party aggrieved by any order entered by the Board under subsection (g), (h), (i), or (j) of section 814 may obtain a review of such order in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia by filing in the court, within sixty days from the date of service upon it of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Board be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Board, and thereupon the Board shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including all evidence taken and the report and order of the Board. Thereupon the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and shall have power to affirm or set aside the order of the Board. The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by the preponderance of the evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Board and to be adduced upon the proceeding in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Board may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by the preponderance of the evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, with respect to action in the matter under consideration. If the court shall set aside an order issued under subsection (j) of section 814 it may, in the case of an organization, enter a judgment canceling the registration of such organization and relieving it from the requirement of further annual reports, or in the case of an individual, enter a judgment requiring the Attorney General (A) to strike the name of such individual from the registration statement or annual report on which it appears, or (B) cancel the registration of such individual under section 808, as may be appropriate. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in title 28, United States Code, section 1254.

(b) Any order of the Board issued under section 14 shall become final—

(1) upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review, if no such petition has been duly filed within such time; or

(2) upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Board has been affirmed or the petition for review dismissed by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and no petition for certiorari has been duly filed; or

(3) upon the denial of a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Board has been affirmed or the petition for review dismissed by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; or

(4) upon the expiration of ten days from the date of issuance of the mandate of the Supreme Court, if such Court directs that the order of the Board be affirmed or the petition for review dismissed.

PENALTIES

SEC. 816. (a) If there is in effect with respect to any organization or individual a final order of the Board requiring registration under section 807 or section 808 of this Act—

(1) such organization shall, upon conviction of failure to register, to file any registration statement or annual report, or to keep records as required by section 807, be punished for each such offense by a fine of not less than $2,000 and not more than $5,000; and

(2) each individual having a duty under subsection (h) of section 807 to register or to file any registration statement or annual report on behalf of such organization, and each individual having a duty to register under section 808, shall, upon conviction of failure to so register or to file any such registration statement or annual report, be punished for each such offense by a fine of not less than $2,000 and not more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

For the purposes of this subsection, each day of failure to register, whether on the part of the organization or any individual, shall constitute a separate offense.

(b) Any individual who, in a registration statement or annual report filed under section 807 or section 808, willfully makes any false statement or willfully omits to state any fact which is required to be stated, or which is necessary to make the statements made or information given not misleading, shall upon conviction thereof be punished for each such offense by a fine of not less than $2,000 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. For the purposes of this subsection—

(1) each false statement willfully made, and each willful omission to state any fact which is required to be stated, or which is necessary to make the statements made or information given not misleading, shall constitute a separate offense; and

(2) each listing of the name or address of any one individual shall be deemed a separate statement.

(c) Any organization which violates any provision of section 811 of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each such violation by a fine of not less than $2,000 and not more than $5,000. Any individual who violates any provision of sections 805, 806, 810, or 811 of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each such violation by a fine of not less than $2,000 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

APPLICABILITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT

SEC. 817. Nothing in this title shall be held to make the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act inapplicable to the exercise of functions, or the conduct of proceedings, by the Board under this title, except to the extent that this title affords additional procedural safeguards for organizations and individuals.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 818. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remaining provisions of this title, or the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

(1) In line 11, page 44, strike out the word "higher" and insert in lieu thereof "highest" and strike out the word "two".

(2) In line 20, page 44, strike out the semicolon following the words "seasonal differentials" and insert after such words a comma and the following: "or, (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to $66\frac{2}{3}$ per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop."

(3) In line 25, page 44, strike out the word "higher" and insert in lieu thereof "highest".

(4) In line 16 after the words "such Act" insert the following new sentence: "In establishing ceilings for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season, the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to producers of such commodity in all areas."

AUGUST 15 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. In looking back over both the First World War and the Second World War, I have been impressed with what seems to be, in retrospect, the unwisdom of demanding total and unconditional surrender.

I wonder whether we would be in a better position if we were to accept proposals for an arrangement of the Korean situation, with these two conditions firmly and plainly expressed: First, that it must involve the immediate retirement of the North Korean forces to points north of the thirty-eighth parallel; second, that there will not be tied up with it recognition of Communist China.

It seems to me we should not simply close the door on every proposal for a settlement. If we make those two conditions, let us see whether these nations have anything to offer.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not disagree with the able Senator from Vermont, and I am not proposing that we close the door, because I think we always should be willing to sit down and listen to any reasonable proposal.

The point I make is that instead of making it clear in their proposals that there would still have to be a withdrawal to the 38th parallel, the Indian proposal now is apparently attempting to sugarcoat that end of the matter. If, as I understand from my reading of dispatches of today, they do not mean to have that as a condition precedent to the discussion, I do not see how they can expect to have a settlement of the war or how they can expect to establish a system of collective security which will mean anything to the small law-abiding nations, or how we can negotiate with the Communists while they are acting as active aggressors in South Korea.

Our Government's position, as I have understood it to be up to this time, and as I believe it still to be, is that the aggressors must retire beyond the thirty-eighth parallel, and also that we will not tie that in with the question of recognition of the Communist regime in China.

When they have done that, I quite agree with the Senator from Vermont that the United Nations Security Council, as a security council, or the General Assembly of the United Nations, as a general assembly, then should discuss what further steps, if any, should be taken in the interest of the future peace of the world.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California and I are in complete agreement on those two conditions.

The only plea I make is that we should maintain a friendly attitude toward attempts to settle the Korean situation. We can be firm, yet friendly. I do not want us to be, and I do not think this country should be, in the position of just pushing off everyone who makes any suggestion which might be helpful toward solving the situation. We have perfectly good reasons for saying that the invaders must retire beyond the 38th parallel. We have perfectly good reasons for saying that recognition of Communist China must not be part of the agreement. However, let us say it in a gentlemanly, friendly, and approachable way. That is the point I am making.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not disagree with the Senator from Vermont on that point. Of course, when the United States has its forces fighting and dying in Korea, it is a little difficult to have a friendly approach to the North Koreans, under the circumstances with which we now are faced in Korea. However, I certainly believe that we should keep the door open for suggestions from such countries as India or any others which might make suggestions.

Mr. FLANDERS. The friendliness I am suggesting is friendliness toward those who are proposing to make suggestions as to the composition of the difficulty. That is the area of friendliness to which I refer.

Mr. KNOWLAND. However, I think the Senator from Vermont will agree with me that for the invaders merely to move north of the thirty-eighth parallel will not mean a great deal in the final analysis. If the Republic of Korea, the United States, and the western world are to be living under a gun, in that aggression of the same type might take place 3 months from now or 6 months from now, a peace achieved under those circumstances would be a very uneasy one. It seems to me that the United Nations Security Council must consider how the peace of the world can be preserved in the future, so that the pledges of the great powers at Cairo that Korea would be a free and independent nation may be carried out, and so that the mandate of the United Nations itself that a free election would be held in Korea—although such an election was blocked by Soviet Russia in the area north of the thirty-eighth parallel—can be implemented at this late date.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN TESTIMONY TAKEN IN EXECUTIVE SESSION BY BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE ON DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I desire to propound a unanimous-consent request. I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is in complete agreement with me regarding the request.

Of course, I appreciate that the matter to which I shall now refer would best be brought up in a meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee. However, in view of the fact that it would be rather difficult to have a meeting of the committee at this time and to have the committee vote on this matter—although it is one within the jurisdiction of the committee—I now ask unanimous consent that there may be printed parts of the hearings held by the committee in executive session. I refer to the testimony of certain witnesses which certain Senators desire to have made available.

I have talked to a number of Senators, and it is agreeable to them to have that part of the testimony in executive session printed.

I have talked to the Senator from Ohio, and I understand that what I propose now is agreeable to him. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] was not here, or I would have consulted him.

I make that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRICKER. I think it will be very helpful to have that testimony printed.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

EFFECT ON HAND-MADE GLASSWARE AND POTTERY INDUSTRY OF GOVERNMENT POLICY AGAINST A PROTECTIVE TARIFF

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, even in the midst of world-wide confusion and problems involving the future destiny of mankind, we must realize at times that there are problems among our people at home, and we must consider the interests of our own people. People still work and produce and are paid wages.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Court of Common Please of Guernsey County, Ohio, the letter coming from the office of Judge Howard E. Faught, the common pleas judge of that county. He is also chairman of the Guernsey County Democratic Executive Committee. He appeals to me, on behalf of the labor in that county and in the general community of our State where hand-made glassware and pottery are produced. In the southeastern section of Ohio labor is being put out of employment by the importation of foreign-made glassware without any adequate protection by way of tariff or otherwise. That is a result of the reciprocal trade agreements. Much of the imported glassware, according to Judge Faught, comes from behind the iron curtain or from countries satellite to Russia.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the body of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the letter I have received from Judge Faught, whom I have known for many years, who is a patriotic citizen, sincerely interested in the welfare of his country and the people of his community.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS,
GUERNSEY COUNTY,
Cambridge, Ohio, August 3, 1950.

Hon. JOHN W. BRICKER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRICKER: The Guernsey County Democratic Executive Committee at a recent meeting held a lengthy discussion on the following issue: The effect our Government's present policy against a protective tariff for hand-made glassware and pottery is having upon the domestic manufacture of these articles.

Guernsey County, of which Cambridge is the county seat, is largely dependent upon our glass and pottery industries. It is our understanding that hand-made glassware and pottery are being imported into this country from nations now under the domination of Communist Russia and this, our committee feels, should stop.

Our committee unanimously passed a resolution directing me, as its chairman, to urge you as our representative to do everything within your power to give adequate protection, through a proper tariff, to the handmade glass and pottery industries of our Nation.

It is our belief that should the present flood of imports continue, entire cities in the Ohio Valley and other parts of our Nation will suffer the distress of widespread unemployment. If our Nation is to be benevolent, we urge you to focus some of that benevolence on our domestic industry.

We trust that you will direct your best efforts toward stopping the importation of cheap labor products, which has so greatly influenced the demand for and production of these two stable American industries.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD E. FAUGHT,
Chairman, Guernsey County Democratic Executive Committee.

NEED FOR ACTION ON CONTROL BILL—PRICE INCREASES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have two subject matters upon which I wish to comment briefly today. I am taking advantage of what is an obvious lull in the proceedings of the Senate, a lull which seems to arise inevitably whenever we enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at some specific time. I recognize that, on occasion, such unanimous-consent agreements are necessary in order to speed up the business of the Senate. In this instance, however, I think that, as has so frequently happened in the past, we have an example of a unanimous-consent agreement which has delayed action in the Senate. I think we could very well have gone to work and voted on the pending bill probably as early as tonight. We should have done it, because every hour of delay in the passage of this bill is injurious to the consumers of the country. I believe the passage of the bill itself, even though it only provides for stand-by powers, will have a very beneficial effect by way of psychological control of selfish interests that are taking great advantage of the consuming public in these days.

I was rather interested, as I walked out of my apartment house this morning, to hear the woman at the lobby desk call out after me and say, "Senator, will you do what you can about meat prices?" She said, "They have even increased the price of ham now, and there is no meat that a woman in my position can afford to buy for her family by reason of the great increases in prices which have occurred within recent weeks."

Once before, Mr. President, I commented on this subject on the floor of the Senate, and the American Meat Institute denied my charges of profiteering in the meat industry. I repeat them today, because the American Meat Institute is not going to get by, so far as I am concerned, with a denial of facts. My charge is that there is no justification for the increase in meat prices since the beginning of the Korean war at any level, whether at the level of packers' wholesale prices or at the retail level in the butcher shops, and that those who have charge of the distribution of meat are taking advantage of the American consumer.

I did not rise, however, to discuss the pending bill, other than to remark that I think quick action on the control bill is essential on the part of the Senate to stop the selfish profiteering that has come to characterize so many of the activities of the sellers of consumer goods in America in recent weeks. I did rise to talk about two other matters for the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

SALE OF STRATEGIC GOVERNMENT-OWNED PLANTS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a free and inquiring press is one of our greatest safeguards against bungling and corruption in Government. Many scandals have been averted by reporters calling to the attention of Congress and the people provable facts.

On August 6 a reporter whom I know and respect as trustworthy, Tris Coffin, reported on the radio:

> Attention, Senate watchdog committee. You could well investigate to see who is behind the questionable sale of strategic Government-owned plants. At the last minute Chairman Symington, of the Resources Board, stopped the bargain sale of a Government-owned synthetic-rubber plant at Akron. The deal was all set for General Tire & Rubber Co. to buy the six-and-a-half-million-dollar plant for only $2,200,000.
> General Tire did not even propose to make rubber at the plant—instead, plastics. Someone—and the committee could find out who—declared this strategic plant surplus.

This is indeed a problem that should be brought to the attention of the Nation. The United States is today consuming rubber at the rate of 1,200,000 tons a year. Our capacity for producing synthetics is 675,000 tons a year, so I am informed. Communist guerrilla operations in Malaya and southeast Asia are destroying our natural-rubber supply at its source.

It is claimed that this particular plant at Akron, Ohio, with some rehabilitation, could produce more than 30,000 tons of synthetic rubber annually. Both the respected elder statesman, Chairman CARL VINSON, of the House Armed Services Committee, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], the able chairman of the Senate watchdog committee, objected in writing to the National Security Resources Board regarding the sale of this strategic plant. The sale was stopped.

But there are still hidden facts that should be revealed.

Who approved the sale of the plant? The Resources Board now says the sale should not go through. Presidential Assistant John Steelman says he was not for the sale. The RFC denies it was pushing the sale, and the Munitions Board takes the same position.

Was the go-between in this strange deal a former employee of Rubber Reserve?

Was the Under Secretary of the Navy in any way involved in the back-stage negotiations?

What is this mysterious essential plastic the General Tire Co. now says it was going to produce? A check of the military and the Munitions Board does not disclose any new essential plastic so far as I can find out. Nor is the Resources Board familiar with it.

Last Sunday General Tire & Rubber ran a large and misleading advertisement sharply criticizing the original broadcast which called attention to the proposed sale. This advertisement was not merely an attack on a reliable reporter; it appears to be an attempt to intimidate or, at least, to mislead Congress. General Tire knew that an investigation by the Senate watchdog committee was probable; and the advertisement was, I think, an attempt to intimidate the committee.

It is nothing new for General Tire & Rubber to be at odds with the Government. William O'Neil, president of General Tire, strongly opposed the Shafer Rubber Act of 1948, which requires that facilities be maintained in the United States for the production of not less than 600,000 tons of rated capacity. Mr. O'Neil, in testimony before the Senate Rubber Subcommittee 2 years ago, said:

> Why do we have to waste our money on some kind of a foolish dream of an impossible stock in this country? The price of rubber today indicates there is no shortage of rubber.

Today, however, with great consumption of rubber, there is a deliberate Communist sabotage campaign in natural-rubber areas, and rearmament rubber is once again scarce.

The General Tire & Rubber Co. also is in controversy with the Treasury Department over import duties on styrene, an ingredient used both in synthetic-rubber and plastic production.

The questionable sale of strategic Government-owned plants is but one area where a free and aggressive press and radio can serve the Nation. Any attempt to intimidate such investigations should be sharply criticized.

Furthermore, Mr. President, in my opinion there is a great need for a congressional investigation into the whole question of the transfer of surplus property since the close of World War II hostilities. I think such an investigation will show that great mistakes in judgment were made by many Government officials in respect to the disposal of surplus Government property. I was shocked and disturbed to find since the outbreak of the Korean war that a large number of Sherman tanks, following the end of hostilities, were sold as surplus in the Philippine Islands. Their armament was removed, but other than that I am advised they were left in first-class condition. How valuable these Sherman tanks would have been, Mr. President, at the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, if they could have been quickly removed from the Philippines, certainly a short distance away compared with that involved in shipping tanks from continental United States to Korea. I throw this out as but one suggestion of what I think will be disclosed if there is a thorough investigation on the part of Congress as to the disposition of surplus property, including, for example, the disposition of very useful and large quantities of military trucks, all in first-class shape. I am advised that today there is a shortage of military trucks needed for the transfer of troops to the front lines in case of a sudden outbreak of a full-scale war with Russia.

I sincerely hope that the matter in regard to the particular rubber plant in Akron, Ohio, will simply be the initiating project that will start a thorough in-tion, now that the question has been raised by the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, the Senator from Maryland, is that if we can learn from the mistakes in Korea, we may prevent the same horrible mistakes being made elsewhere in the world, and the very security of this country may be involved upon our doing just that.

Mr. MAYBANK. I might add, with the deepest respect, that if we would learn from mistakes we have made on both sides of the aisle, we would be much better off.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I agree. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. The junior Senator from California practically answered the acting majority leader on the question of who raised the issue. It was the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services who raised the issue, and the Senator from California is merely trying to make the RECORD clear, to balance the RECORD, so as to show what has taken place in the past, and not leave the RECORD showing that a mistake had been made by some Senator on this side of the aisle, which the Senator from Maryland was attempting to correct for the benefit of the public.

Mr. MAYBANK. I know the Senator would never suggest I would do that.

Mr. THYE. No. If the Senator from California will yield further, I wish to concur in the expression voiced by the able acting majority leader that we must proceed with legislation. There is much proposed legislation on the calendar which must be enacted as speedily as possible, and I personally concur with him that we should look forward to winning the war rather than look backward to who made mistakes. Winning the war is the big issue before us. But the junior Senator from California is absolutely correct in making the RECORD clear here this afternoon as to who started the discussion, and what was said.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was on the Committee on Appropriations, and an amendment was offered providing for a 70-group air force, for which I voted. I voted also for the amendment to increase the Navy last year.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator from South Carolina has had a very fine record, both on the Committee on Appropriations and on the floor of the Senate, on questions affecting the national defense.

Reading again, Mr. President, from the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], he gave a breakdown of "Value of Aid," in which he listed the following:

1. Office of the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner (Surplus Military Property), $141,000,000.

2. Department of the Army (Government and Relief in Occupied Areas—GARIOA), $301,000,000.

3. Economic Cooperation Administration (shipments through May 31, 1950), $53,700,000.

At this time I am not disputing these figures as figures, but I merely wish to point out that a quick reading of the statement might indicate that the total of $495,700,000 represented military aid, because we were talking about the defense of Korea and the problems of getting military equipment there.

I merely desire to point out that the GARIOA funds listed here are funds for the improvement of the economy, and ECA funds are for the same general purpose. I think they are necessary. They obviously would not have been spent if they were not necessary, but they did not supply a single gun, bazooka, plane, tank, or howitzer, that would outrange what the Russians had given the Koreans on the other side of the line.

Mr. President, at a later date, when I have had more time, I shall give a more detailed analysis of the figures of the Senator from Maryland, but taking his figure of $141,000,000, I assume that that covers the equipment left by our armies in Korea at the time when we finally departed, in July of last year, and the amount that might have been turned over prior to VJ-day, prior to our departure.

I tried to square those figures with what had been supplied by the Department of Defense, and for that purpose I desire to read another paragraph from a letter of an official of the Defense Department to a Member of the Senate:

When United States forces withdrew from Korea we turned over to the Koreans equipment for internal security, and border and coastal patrol forces. For the most part this consisted of * * *, small arms, vehicles, ammunition, signal equipment, liaison aircraft, and coastal patrol vessels.

They seem to be the matters which have been mentioned, which no one disputes. Further:

This equipment originally cost the United States $56,000,000, and was valued at well over $100,000,000 at the time of transfer.

In other words, we have a little bookkeeping profit here. Apparently at the time we bought the equipment it was worth $56,000,000. At the time we turned it over the war cost had gone up, so we figured that had it been new, it would have been worth, as he said, approximately $100,000,000. It has again been inflated a little, apparently, by the Senator from Maryland, and that must be the item which he calls $141,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will yield, that was what I wanted the distinguished Senator to explain, the replacement value and the inventory value, and what was finally received.

The Senator will recall that testimony was adduced, for example, as to the transfer of the B–29's to Great Britain. The only thing that was charged up against the military-assistance program was the rehabilitation of all those planes. Is that not correct? That is the same as the situation with respect to the signal wire that was transferred.

I was at a loss to understand the figures. I think the Senator will recall that the representative of the State Department corroborated exactly what the distinguished Senator just called to our attention, the $56,000,000, and also the testimony given just a day or two ago by the woman who had been in Korea with the military mission, which also corroborated the fact that the equipment that was left in Korea was left there as surplus property. It consisted of light arms. It was not the kind of equipment the South Korean Republic could depend upon to use in preventing an armed force from invading South Korea. Is that not true?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think, as the Senator put it, that what we were able to do was to equip lightly a number of Korean divisions for the purpose of maintaining internal security and for border control. The South Koreans were armed much more lightly than we would consider that an American division should be armed in order to meet invasion.

Mr. WHERRY. Was it not the testimony of the witness who appeared before the committee that it was hoped the State Department would see the light; that the South Koreans needed heavy equipment; that they needed heavy artillery; that they needed the armament so necessary now to protect the security of South Korea?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think there is no doubt about it. Without trying to quote the person who testified——

Mr. WHERRY. I cannot quote him.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have discussed the matter with members of the misson and have some knowledge of Korea. From time to time they pointed out that they needed heavier equipment, but that a ceiling had been placed upon them with respect to equipment; that they were only going to receive so much money, and, as a result, they had to use the money primarily for replacement parts. That is the actual fact of the situation. I am obliged to leave in a moment to catch a plane. I wanted to mention that point.

I had previously discussed with the Senator from Massachusetts the fact that in the arms-implementation bill less than 8 percent was allocated to the Far East, an important theater. On top of that priority, the testimony is clear that so far as the South Koreans receiving any excess equipment is concerned, they were also receiving a low priority.

Mr. WHERRY. That is a fact.

Mr. KNOWLAND. So what they got was a double-low priority.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, and then the representative said that because of the low priority it was impossible to obtain this other equipment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. So that corroborates and establishes the correctness of the statement the junior Senator from Nebraska made during his colloquy with the Senator from Maryland, as to what the policy was; that there was no opportunity for South Korea to obtain the military equipment so desperately needed. Is that not true?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes. I should like to say, so neither Senators nor anyone else will think that this information is not up to date, that the date of the letter from the representative of the Defense Department is July 19, 1950.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like the record to show it was only after the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee raised this issue that I, knowing of the visit of the distinguished Senator from California to Korea, and that he had in his possession the memorandum, that he has industriously followed the hearings, and has made notes respecting the equipment in question, I felt it was absolutely necessary that the Senator from California come to the Senate Chamber and set the record straight once and for all respecting the low priority to the South Korean Government in the matter of military equipment and the fact that the equipment furnished them was simply for the training of a constabulary force. That is the way the State Department has treated the South Korean Government from the beginning.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the acting majority leader, the Senator from South Carolina, and I am sure I express the views of Members on this side of the aisle that the big job ahead of us is to bring the Korean war to a successful conclusion, but that if we are not to become involved in a similar type of situation elsewhere in the world we had better learn from the mistakes—and I think they have been real mistakes—we have made in the past.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to the bill, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, in January 1945, the OPA and WPB jointly undertook to issue a regulation which they called "maximum average pricing," or more popularly known as MAP. The object of this plan was to require each seller of merchandise to sell exactly the same amount or quantity of merchandise in each price range to each customer as the seller had done in the base period.

The proposal met with Nation-wide opposition. Protests were immediately forthcoming. It was obviously impossible for any seller to deliver specified quantities of merchandise at any price because of shortages of material and labor. Therefore, if the seller had adequate material available to sell at five price ranges and little or no material to sell at a sixth price range, it was virtually impossible for him to sell at any price range.

In view of the fact that some ill-advised officers of the OPA insisted upon having the program inaugurated, a special committee of the House of Representatives under the chairmanship of Representative B. HOWARD SMITH of Virginia, held hearings in the House caucus room during March and April 1945. An adverse report was made to the House on the maximum average price plan as proposed.

As a result of this report by the Smith committee, the plan was withdrawn; but it revised and proposed again in the fall of 1945 in a form known as S. 108. Fortunately, at that time both the House and the Senate were considering the extension of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and, therefore, both the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees had an opportunity to hear testimony on the proposed plan. The result was that the House Banking and Currency Committee proposed an amendment prohibiting any regulation requiring the maximum average pricing formula. This provision was passed in the spring of 1946 by the Eightieth Congress, second session. This provision remained the pricing policy of the Congress and the Nation from that time to the end of price controls.

Despite this, last week when the House bill on this subject was under consideration, an attempt was made in the House to authorize a maximum average price formula. The House, by an overwhelming vote, defeated the proposal, and reaffirmed its stand on it. Since that time, the view has been expressed in some quarters that despite this evidence of legislative intent, the language of the bill is broad enough to permit the application of the now discredited maximum average price formula.

All my amendment seeks to do, therefore, is to reaffirm the congressional policy established on this subject after more than a year of investigation and painstaking consideration.

Mr. President, I hope very much that my friend, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, will see fit to accept the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Missouri has said. I can only say that I will give consideration to the amendment when we vote on the bill and on the amendments, beginning at 1 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. KEM. I thank the Senator.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understand that the conference report on the social-security bill has come from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the conference report has been messaged to the Senate and is being located at the present moment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I desire to state that I have just spoken to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] the chairman of the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee is in session, endeavoring to work out the final draft of the tax bill, which we shall take up next Tuesday or Wednesday, as I understand. The Senator from Georgia asked me to state that he has some remarks to make on the conference report on the social-security bill, and that he had expected to deliver those remarks in the Senate this afternoon, but that for him to do so now would necessitate having the Finance Committee adjourn. The Senator from Georgia said that inasmuch as the Finance Committee hopes to finish its deliberations on the tax bill today, he will make his remarks on the conference report on the social-security bill tomorrow.

I wish to say that tomorrow, when the Senate meets, the first matter to be considered will be the road bill, which I discussed earlier today with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]; and we shall make that bill the order of business as soon as we are able to do so, either by means of obtaining unanimous consent for that purpose, or, if objection is made, by motion. Of course, any Senator will have a right to move that the bill be taken up.

So, Mr. President, if there is nothing further to come before the Senate this afternoon—in view of the necessity of the Finance Committee meeting this afternoon, in order to finish its deliberations on the tax bill—I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

STUDY OF FUEL RESERVES—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Before the Chair entertains a motion for the Senate to take a recess, the present occupant of the Chair, as a Senator speaking from the floor, enters a motion that the Senate reconsider the vote by which Senate Resolution 239 was agreed to yesterday.

The Chair wishes the RECORD to show that the motion to reconsider is entered; and at a later date the motion will be called up.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, may the acting minority leader inquire what that resolution is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a resolution which was reported by the Senator from Arizona and adopted by the Senate yesterday. It provides for an investigation of available fuel reserves and the formulation of a national-fuel policy.

Mr. KEM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. MAYBANK. The acting majority leader understands that the present occupant of the Chair, the Senator from Oklahoma, moves to reconsider the resolution (S. Res. 239), and that the motion will be entered. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

RECESS

Mr. MAYBANK. I move that the Senate recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, August 17, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

out some agreement to act on some day certain on this measure.

We have heard a great deal on both sides of the aisle this week, as we have debated bipartisan foreign policy, about the time having come when we should recapture the initiative from Russia. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was exactly correct in his statement. He criticized American foreign policy, whoever conceived it, because it has lost the initiative to Joe Stalin. We can ill afford that, Mr. President. The passage of our Communist-control bill will help us recapture the initiative, because it will signal clearly to the Russians that we have decided to resist their kind, their creed, and their fellow travelers; that we have decided, at long last, to enforce the provisions included in the guaranty given by Stalin in 1933, when we first recognized Russia. He committed himself in 1933, in November, not to tamper with our internal affairs. Let the world know that we mean business. That is recapturing the initiative. That is getting our foreign policy out of the cantankerous controversy and bickering in which politicians are trying to shift responsibility for the failure which resulted in the shooting war in Korea.

War is the trade-mark of a foreign policy which has collapsed and gone bankrupt. It is not the goal of anyone's foreign policy to promote war; it is to avert war. Whoever is responsible for our foreign policy failed miserably when the shooting started in Korea.

There is another way in which we can recapture the initiative, and that is by letting the world know that America means business in the fight against communism. If we act favorably next Monday we shall let the boys in Korea know we have quit coddling Communists at home. Someone this afternoon has said something about putting first things first. I am trying to put first things first for the benefit of the boys in the front lines. I do not think they are very much concerned about any political jockeying which might go on between my friend from Pennsylvania and myself. The boys would like to know that the great Senate of the United States has declared that we are going to compel the saboteurs and the Communist agents to come up out of the ground or go to jail. We thought enough about winning the war, Mr. President, to put on a rider, even though it was not exactly in the right place. We thought maybe the time had come to put policy, principle, patriotism, and winning the war above a silly and mildewed precedent with reference to saving the integrity of some committee. We went on the initiative.

Finally, Mr. President, I think favorable action by the Senate will be an excellent example to set before the rest of the world, encouraging some of our friends in other countries, also, to do something about communism. Let them know that the United States is facing up to the issue; it will help nudge them to face up to the issue over there. We are the great democratic leader of the world. They look to us and say, "What are you doing about Communists in America?" We say, "Nothing, except talking about them and 'cussing' them out. We are not compelling them to register. We are not forcing them out above ground. We are giving them privileges and opportunities and favors which are denied Republicans and Democrats at election time.

I thing we ought to tell the world now that we are in a crusade against communism, and thus do something that they can imitate and cannot fail to understand and respect. I submit we can do nothing in the field of foreign policy now that would more readily capture the initiative and more encouragingly inspire our soldiers in Korea, or would set a better example before friendly countries, than to act on Monday, precedent or no precedent, and to declare that we favor this Communist-control legislation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely wished to call to the Senator's attention the fact that the provisions of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill have not been debated or opposed in the Senate of the United States. It is only the fact of bringing it up for a vote that has been the subject of debate. The Senator, I think, will agree that that is correct.

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. In looking over the RECORD, I have failed to discover any debate or any real opposition to the merits of the bill. All the debate regarding it has occurred on the question of its consideration. Is that not correct?

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct. I think there is also involved, of course, the point of whose brand is to be put on the heifer. I think there is a little interest in that. Let me say this in conclusion, in response to the interesting commentaries of my good friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS]. He said something about politics in this bill. I have searched my mind and heart to find any basis for the charge that we are playing politics. The charge has been made repeatedly by the majority leader, and it has now been made by the acting majority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS].

We do not want to be guilty of playing politics with communism. I have tried to find out how we can be accused of playing politics. Let me restate the history of this bill, so that we have it in the RECORD. This legislation was introduced by a bipartisan group consisting of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and myself. It was referred to a subcommittee headed by a great distinguished jurist, a member of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND]. Three members of the committee were Democrats, and two were Republicans. The subcommittee voted the bill out unanimously. It came before the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee is comprised overwhelmingly of Democratic Senators, headed by the Democratic Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. The committee voted the bill out with only one dissenting vote. That was by a Republican Senator [Mr. LANGER]. So I cannot see how any politics is involved. Politics did not come into it until something happened and it changed from a rolling legislative ball into something tied up in moth balls in the Democratic policy committee which is of course a hand maiden of the Democratic National Committee. I do not know what happened to put this measure in a pigeonhole.

Certainly I can't understand how we can be guilty of politics. We are willing to work out any cooperative program that Senators on the other side of the aisle wish to suggest in order to get action. What distresses us is that while the war goes on, the sabotage goes on, propaganda goes on, and the communist conspiracy goes on at home, and while all this twaddle appears in the Daily Worker about the war effort, we continue to wait and delay and act uncertain and send up new bills, trying to get away from doing something to meet the menace of communism. We have already lost many weeks of valuable and irretrievable time. Some day we may all rue this fact.

Mr. President, I hope that without further delay the Senate will be given a chance to declare itself on this important matter of such great significance all around the world.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understand that three Senators would like to submit amendments to the pending measure. First, I should like to send to the desk an amendment with the explanation that it is a corrective amendment, which I submit at the request of the Department of Agriculture. I submit it in behalf of myself, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I have prepared on the proposed amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1 and 3. The amendment changing the word "higher" to "highest" is necessary because there are more than two minimum prices applicable to ceilings on agricultural commodities.

2. The amendment to be inserted at page 44, line 20, will add two additional minimum standards applicable to ceilings on agricultural commodities. S. 3396, as reported by the committee and amended on the floor, prohibits the establishment of any ceiling on agricultural commodities below (1) the parity price of such commodity or (2) the price received by producers during the period May 24, 1950—June 24, 1950. There are a number of agricultural commodities which because of their seasonal nature were not marketed during this period; hence the effective minimum ceiling prices for those commodities would be the parity price. The provision contained in the amendment adding section 402 (d) (3) (iii) establishes an additional minimum ceiling price which will be applicable to these commodities for which the market was not active during the specified period. Such price will be the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, in which the market for such commodity was active, adjusted to a price in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950.

This will tend to assure an equality in treatment between producers whose commodities were not marketed during the period May 24, 1950–June 24, 1950, and producers of commodities which were marketed during the specified period.

Under existing law the price of fire-cured tobacco is mandatorily supported at 75 percent of the loan rate of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and the prices of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco are mandatorily supported at 66⅔ percent of the loan rate of Burley tobacco.

This amendment would insure minimum ceiling prices for these commodities which would be the same percentage above the support price as the minimum ceiling for burley tobacco is above the support price for burley.

4. The other amendment requires the President in establishing maximum prices for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season to give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of such agricultural commodity in all areas.

Some agricultural commodities have already been marketed at prices above the minimum ceiling prices specified in this section. The proposed amendment would require that due consideration be given to the establishment of ceiling prices on these commodities at levels which will afford producers in all marketing areas an opportunity to receive the prices obtained by the producers who marketed such commodities in areas prior to the enactment of this act. This paragraph also requires that due consideration be given to affording producers of similar commodities produced for the same general purpose ceilings in line with those commodities for which the marketing season began prior to the enactment of this act. This provision is limited to ceilings which may be established only during the 1950 marketing season and, therefore, may prove to be of limited applicability.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President——

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time to offer an amendment to Senate bill 3936, which I send to the desk and ask to have printed and lie on the table. At the same time I ask that a statement which I have prepared regarding the amendment be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR IVES UPON AMENDMENT DEFINING THE POWER OF THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE TO SET MILK PRICES IN AREAS NOT COVERED BY FEDERAL MILK MARKETING ORDERS

The purpose of this amendment is to insure that fluid milk prices in different areas of the country—not covered by Federal marketing agreements—are fixed in the same ratio as prevailed in the pre-Korea base period.

At present this bill contains a comparable provision affecting those 150,000 farm families which now are subject to Federal milk-marketing orders. This amendment remedies the inequity brought about by ignoring the over 700,000 farm families which are not covered by Federal marketing agreements.

The measure merely provides that—in fixing milk prices—the ratio between prices in different areas must be maintained. Since milk prices in the different areas were determined in the first instance by differences in milk quality, and costs of feed, this bill simply directs the Administrator to take these varying factors into consideration.

It is further provided that—whenever the Secretary of Agriculture decides that this formula would not be in the best interest of a given area—it need not be applied.

Because this amendment insures a steady milk supply by guaranteeing equitable treatment to the 85 percent of farm families which are not covered by Federal milk marketing agreements, its inclusion now would be in the best interests of both the farmers and the milk-consuming public.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to Senate bill 3936. I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I enjoyed the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota. As is ofttimes the case—and I am sure he did not mean to do it—words have been put in my mouth which I did not utter. The Senator from South Dakota was not criticized for playing politics because of the bill which he is sponsoring and which he has offered in the form of an amendment to the pending bill. I mentioned politics because of the Senator's fantastic attack, as it seemed to me, upon the foreign policy of America. I think there have been too many political attacks made upon the foreign policy of America. I intend in the near future to discuss this on the floor of the Senate. I hope the Senator did not think that I meant to infer that he was playing politics because of his sponsorship of his internal-security bill or his offering of it as an amendment to the pending legislation. The Senator is mistaken if he so interpreted my remarks.

Mr. MUNDT. I am happy to have the Senator's interpretation. However, if the Senator will search my remarks, I think he will find that the junior Senator from South Dakota had not even criticized Democratic foreign policy at all at the time the Senator from Pennsylvania made his attack about politics.

Mr. MYERS. He made a political attack upon the Democratic policy committee. The Senator time after time this afternoon, as well as on previous days, made atacks which I believe were political attacks upon the Democratic policy committee. I raised the issue of politics not because of the nature of the legislation involved. It is my intention in the near future to review our foreign policy, to review the votes of the leadership of the Republican Party in the United States Senate, and to review the votes of the Republican Party on these great issues that have helped to contain communism, that kept the Communists behind the iron curtain. Those are matters which I intend to raise. However, I hope the Senator understands that when I attributed some politics to him it was not because of his sponsorship of his bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I have no disposition today to engage in any political debate which the Senator desires to instigate about our foreign policy. He has a right to inject that into the debate at any time. I may be inspired to participate in it at some later time. Just now I am concerned that we delay no longer in enacting legislation to curb and expose Communists here in America. What we need now is action, not alibis.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. The distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] have indicated that they wish to speak this afternoon. They will take probably 40 minutes. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has been waiting all day to speak. I understand the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] likewise intends to speak this afternoon.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate the fact that the first Senator who addresses the Chair is recognized. Would it be in keeping to have a unanimous-consent agreement that the Senator from Illinois may be recognized to make his address tomorrow following the convening of the Senate at noon and after a quorum call, unless there be some matters such as conference reports before the Senate. If such an arrangement can be made, we may conclude by 7 o'clock today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from South Carolina is in order. Is there objection to it?

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask unanimous consent that upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow, and following the quorum call, if there are no conference reports ready for consideration, the Senator from Illinois be given an opportunity to address the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. May we waive the quorum call?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. If we do not have a quorum call the Senator could start immediately after the Senate convenes.

Mr. MAYBANK. There may be some conference reports ready for action. I should like to have a quorum call, if it is agreeable to the acting minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota have an agreement as to which will proceed at this time.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator from New Jersey. It is very courteous and kind of him to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have been advised that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] also desires to speak tonight. So, when the Senator from New Jersey concludes, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who is the ranking Republican member on the Committee on Appropriations, will be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has a list of those who desire to be heard. First on the list to be recognized after the Senator from South Dakota concluded was the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], but the Senator from New Hampshire is not present at the moment. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] is next, then the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS,] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS].

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] will wait until tomorrow, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], just notified me he desires to be heard tonight. When the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from New Jersey conclude, if it is agreeable, the Senator from New Hampshire will be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Followed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MAYBANK. Again I wish to advise Senators who may be interested as to the time when the Senate will recess, that it will be at least an hour or an hour and a half from now.

FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF INDONESIA

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, today marks a holiday for the Republic of Indonesia, and it is entirely fitting and proper that this honorable body, the United States Senate, should give special recognition to this important holiday. Its importance is clearly outlined by the terrific struggle in which we are engaged in the Far East, and the necessity of the United States of America and the other free and independent nations of the United Nations maintaining the most cordial, friendly, and hospitable relationships.

Five years ago the people of Indonesia declared their independence as a free nation. It is an occasion which affords us a singular opportunity to reaffirm our support of the people of Indonesia and of free peoples everywhere who seek genuine national independence and democratic self-government. The Senate of the United States has already, to its credit, unanimously passed a resolution to this effect.

One hundred and seventy-five years have passed since our own Revolutionary experience. That is a long time, but the names of Concord, Lexington, Valley Forge, and Yorktown have not lost their capacity to stir our deepest emotions. In our hearts, there is still the ring of Jefferson's undying words which began "When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the bonds which have connected them with another." We remember the proclamation to the unbelieving world of 1776 that "we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

We know that these are not mere words out of the past, echoes of some forgotten era. They are the eternal symbols of American liberty. They are vital mainsprings of our ceaseless efforts to improve the institutions under which we live. It is to them that we invariably turn for a renewal of faith in the never-ending struggle against injustice and tyranny.

Other peoples, too, have drawn strength and hope from our revolutionary symbols. During the nineteenth century our symbols of liberty spread throughout much of the world. Crowns in Europe tumbled at their approach, and in South America colonies threw off their shackles. Today in Asia the beliefs of the founders of this Nation are finding a renewed expression and the truths they articulated a new confirmation.

The peoples of that vast area demand and are obtaining that basic right of all human beings—the right to order their national existence in their own way, the right to live in independence, in peace, and in equality with the other nations of the world. It is the same right which was claimed by the Thirteen Colonies in America in the eighteenth century. It is the same right which later generations of Americans have fought to uphold.

National freedom does not come easily to peoples nor is it easily defended. This is no less true for Asia than for the United States. In Asia, as in America, freedom has exacted its sacrifice of patriots. In Asia, as in America, it has demanded the putting aside of personal fortunes in a common dedication to noble purpose.

Asians have shown that they are willing to pay this price. They have the selflessness, the courage, and the determination to establish foundations of enduring liberty.

Nowhere is this better demonstrated than is the Republic of Indonesia. Not a few of the present Indonesian leaders have spent long months in prison for their dream of liberty. Others who shared this elusive dream have had to lay down their lives before it could become a reality. For decades the nationalist movement felt the heavy hand of foreign domination.

But the Indonesian peoples refused to abandon their hope, and by the summer of 1945 a mighty tide of national liberation had swept over Java and Sumatra and rolled on into the outlying islands. From one end of the archipelago to the other, the cry "Mederka"—freedom—was heard as the republic came into being.

Four years were to pass, however, before that cry obtained the sanction of a legal transfer of sovereignty. They were difficult and bitter years. To make matters worse, in the midst of their greatest difficulties for independence, the republicans were beset with an internal Communist uprising, which was put down only by a near-exhausting expenditure of their strength.

By the winter of 1948–49, the fortunes of the Republic were at their lowest ebb. President Soekarno and other leaders were in jails. Almost all the principal Indonesian cities were held by the Dutch Armies, which numbered more than 100,000 men. But the spirit and will for democracy and independence was strong and deeply embedded within the people.

Gradually the weight of world opinion began to make itself felt in the situation. The United Nations worked tirelessly to bring about a settlement which would protect the legitimate interests of the Netherlands, but which would also insure the independence of Indonesia. Such a settlement was achieved at The Hague in December 1949. Sovereignty was transferred in the same month to the United States of Indonesia. On December 28, 1949, the United States recognized the new nation, and we today pay our respects to the Republic of Indonesia.

We as Americans can take pride in the part our Government has played within the United Nations to bring into being an independent Indonesia. Our representatives on the Security Council consistently opposed efforts to seek a solution by force. Moreover, since the creation of the UN Committee of Good Offices on Indonesia in 1947, we have had representatives in that country who have worked to achieve a satisfactory formula for reconciling the Dutch and the Indonesians. We in the Senate have even a more direct cause for pride. Our colleague, the distinguished junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM], was a member of the UN committee that helped to negotiate the Renville Agreement, and it was that agreement which showed the way to an eventual settlement of the problem.

Now that the Indonesians have achieved their independence, what lies ahead for them? Our own experiences indicate that a revolution is a beginning, not an end. National freedom would be an empty phrase unless it had as its objectives human equality and a freer more satisfying way of life for all people.

We may expect that, as they met their responsibilities in bringing about their independence, the Indonesians will also meet those new responsibilities to their country and to the world community which are an essential obligation of freedom. As they move forward, therefore, toward new horizons of accomplishment, it is altogether appropriate that we wish them well and express to them our hope that in the very near future we will see and live with a prosperous Asia, independent and democratic, free from militarism, oppression, and fear of totalitarianism.

Again I thank my friend and colleague from New Jersey for his courtesy and kindness.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, it is with extreme reluctance that I arise today to associate myself with the unfinished business, Senate bill 3936. With its immediate purposes I am in genuine accord, but with the philosophies it engenders, I have little sympathy. This is so first, because as an American, I resent mandatory controls and their attendant restrictions, and second, such a program is contrary to the whole philosophy of our form of government and our way of life.
